Poetry.

Always a River to Cross.

There's always a river to cross;
  Always an effort to make
If there's anything good to win,
  Any rich prizes to take.
Yonder's the fruit we crave,
  Yonder's the charming scene;
But deep and wide with a troubled tide
  Is the river that lies between.

For the treasures of precious worth
  We must patiently dig and dive;
For the places we long to fill
  We must push and struggle and strive,
And always and everywhere
  We'll find in our onward course
Thorns for the feet and trials to meet,
  And a difficult river to cross.

The rougher the way that we take,
  The stouter the heart and nerve;
The stones in our path we break,
  Nor e'er from our impulse swerve.
For the glory we hope to win
  Our labors we count no loss;
'Tis folly to pause and murmur because
  Of the river we have to cross.

So, ready to do and dare,
  Should we in our places stand,
Fulfilling the Master's will,
  Fulfilling the soul's demand.
For though as the mountain high
  The billows may rear and toss,
They'll not overwhelm if the Lord's at the helm
  When the difficult river we cross.

Josephine Pollard.

"QUITS."

When one is fluffy-haired, cheery tempered and twenty-three years of age—and little Lady Loveday was all three—one does not regard with unmixed rapture the prospect of a whole week with the British Association for the Advancement of Science. But Sir James had been elected president for the year, and his wife, as in duty bound, was obliged to accompany him.

The town of Mudchester, with its forest of tall chimneys and its perpetual gloomy pall, may possibly represent the sinews and strength of England, but it is not exactly an ideal place in which to spend the early days of September. Elsewhere there are blue skies, heather-clad moors and grouse on the wing, but Mudchester, for some inscrutable reason, preserves the same gray and depressed appearance year in and year out. Sir James Loveday, however, full of the temporary importance which attaches to the eminent scientist who is president of the year, was delighted with the whole thing, and especially proud of showing off his pretty young wife to his scientific colleagues, whose spouses, though uniting in their persons the manifold virtues of the British matron, could hardly lay claim to either epithet. He had only been married a year. They had met on a homeward-bound Cunarder, and though this particular ship had beaten the record, there had been time enough for Sir James to become enamored of Miss Lena Gardner, who, finding no one younger to her taste on board, had smiled on the elderly scientist until he had offered her his name and his fortune. She was a sensible young woman with a nice appreciation of the good things of this life, and, in six weeks' time from their landing at Liverpool, they were quietly married in London.

Quite little murmur of admiration and a notable craning of masculine necks greeted Lady Loveday, as made her appearance in the Town Hall of Mudchester on the night of the opening address. It was her first introduction to the scientific world, and men of science, much like other men, are apt to appreciate good looks. In her white brocade mantle, a boa of ostrich feathers encircling her throat, and some diamond arrows thrust through her blonde hair, she looked a radiant vision of youth and beauty in the crowd of ill-dressed, gawky women who made up the feminine portion of the audience. Devotion to the toilette forms no part of the programme of the ladies who attend meetings of the British Association, the advancement of science being more important in their eyes than the plaiting of hair and wearing of gold. And so Lena was able to make her little sensation. She entered the large hall alone, for Sir James was already in his place on the platform, and was even giving the prelimary cough which proceeds the opening address.

"By Jove!" said a bronzed young man to himself—a young man who had strolled in late, and now found himself at the very back of the vast hall—"if that isn't Lena! Odd that I should see her the first week I arrive in England! What the deuce is she doing here? Wonder if she has forgotten? Well—it's three years ago."

The opening address was an enormous success, as it always is. During the week the popular enthusiasm cooled by many scientific lectures, many abate; but on the opening night no judge on the bench is surer of a laugh than the eminent scientist who opens the meeting. The mildest jokelets are received with rapture, the feeblest similes get a round of applause. Lady Loveday was surrounded by admiring chemists, biologists and botanists by the time the large audience was filing out.

"You'll come with our expedition on Thursday, Lady Loveday, won't you?" urged a thin young professor from a Scotch University, whose appearance suggested the suspicion that he had recently come out of an eye-hospital.

Lady Loveday smiled, and made up her mind to the inevitable. After all, he was only a little worse than the rest. All the young men at the meeting wore turndown collars, and coats which had apparently been made for somebody else.

"I shall be delighted," she said, in her most cordial tone. "Where are you going, and what are you going to do to improve me?"

"Oh, it's an expedition down a salt mine. We shall have to take you down in a bucket. You won't mind, will you?" urged the weak-eyed young man eagerly.

"Net at all, if you will insure the rope not breaking."

But the same, when Thursday arrived, and Lena found herself alone at the railway station—for Sir James had a committee meeting that morning, and could only join her later on in the day—she felt somewhat depressed at the prospect before her. There was a large and somewhat weird-looking crowd on the platform. A slight drizzle was falling, and the ladies of the party had unanimously elected to appear in bag-like waterproof garments, though, to be sure, their male kind ran them hard in the matter of curious raiment. Most of the travellers had invested in paper-bags full of Bath buns, for an expedition with the British Association is generally fraught with peril in the matter of supplies. The weak-eyed young man was in a state of excitement bordering on delirium. Lady Loveday sighed as her eye ran over the mass of pushing, perspiring, be-mackintoshed human beings on the platform.

"Thare isn't a soul here that I want to speak to," she thought, settling into the comfortable corner-place which the youthful professor had secured for her; and then, as her eye caught the square-shouldered back of a check-coated man in the distance, she added mentally: "That looks like a nice man. His hair is cut beautifully short, and he's got a brown neck and a properly ironed collar. He reminds me of poor Dick."

But, directly after, the train steamed out of the station and Lady Loveday's reminiscences came to an end. She had to make conversation with her cicerone for the day and a whole carriageful of other people. By the time they had arrived at the pit's mouth and were waiting their turn to go down, Lena was not sure that she wanted to engage in such a perilous experiment.

Only about a quarter of the trainful of people could be accommodated under the shed which covered the shaft, the rest were waiting outside. Finally, however, she was jammed with some seven or eight other people, including her scientific admirer, in the baize-covered bucket, and was emptied out, after an uncanny descent through a black void, into the brown-walled cavern at the bottom. The mine had been decorated with thousands of candles in honor of the event, and each visitor was provided with a tallow dip stuck into a wooden handle. Down in the depths of the mine the Scotch professor waxed confidential, not to say tender.

"This man is getting a bore," thought Lady Loveday; "I must really evade him somehow;" and with another turn of the rock she managed to slip away from him. Candle in hand, she followed a group of people in front of her. Presently one of the party—the young man whose back she had seen on the platform—stopped, and, with an action which she recognized at once, struck a match, stooped his head, and lighted a cigarette.

"Why, it is Dick!" she murmured; and just then he turned and saw her. "I thought you were in—Afghanistan," she went on hurriedly, as he stood gazing at her.

"So I have been, for the last two years. That frontier business took longer than I expected. And you?

Lady Loveday blushed and looked down. Here was an adventure after her own heart. She was a curious mixture of practical worldliness and theoretical sentimentality. She had liked him, handsome, penniless Captain Bramwell, more than any man she had ever known, and he—well, she was quite aware that he had worshipped the very ground she trod on. But all that was three years ago, and in three years there are many changes.

"I saw you the other night," he continued presently; "you came in an awfully fetching cloak, with a white fluffy thing around your neck. I've been trying to find you out ever since, but nobody that I asked could tell me anything about Miss Gardner."

Lady Loveday smiled. He did not know of her marriage, then? The caprice took her not to tell him just yet—she wanted, womanlike, to see if he had remained faithful all these years.

"Oh, I am such an insignificant person in the midst of all these bigwigs."

Dick smiled back at her—he had a charming smile—and they wandered along together, each with a tallow dip flickering and spluttering, and fitfully lighting their handsome young faces. She had not altered one bit, he said; and she declared he was as brown as a Hindoo, and would have to be scraped white. Time flies when old lovers meet, and nearly an hour had gone before Dick had told her that he had come down to the Association to read a paper in the geographical section. Would she come and hear it? Of course, of course, she would! Poor old Dick! Why, he was just as hard hit, she firmly believed, as ever.

When they at length got back to the bottom of the shaft, there was not a soul to be seen. The awful truth began to dawn upon them that they had been left behind. How easily that might be, with the five or six hundred people who had come with the excursion, they both saw at a glance. What was to be done? Nothing—absolutely nothing. Lady Loveday turned greenish white as she leaned against the rock.

"Sir James," she moaned—"Sir James would never let me die like a dog in a hole."

"Sir James?" said Dick, surprised. 'You mean the president? Is he a great friend of yours?"

"He is—O my poor Dick!—he is—my husband!" she faltered, not daring to look at him now. Captain Bramwell gave a little whistle, and turned away. What a farce, and how like Lena the whole thing was! Lady Loveday did not see him smile.

"Forgive me!" she murmured, stepping nearer to him, and laying a caressing hand on his arm. She was very fond of the drama, and that was always what they said in plays, when the old lover came back from India and found the heroine faithless.

"My poor child," he answered gravely, "I'll forgive you anything—as long as we ever get out of this infernal pit."

Lena could hardly conceal her disappointment. Was it possible—actually possible—that he did not care, that he did not remember? It couldn't be, he had loved her too well! He must be pretending, just to look as if he were indifferent.

They waited a long time, and it was 4 o'clock before the whirr of the bucket was heard coming to their relief. An explanation of Captain Bramwell's equanimity with regard to her marriage was afforded Lady Loveday on their arrival at the top of the shaft. Hurrying toward the pit's mouth was seen Sir James accompanied by a pretty girl in blue, a girl whose naive delight at seeing Captain Bramwell was obvious to all the bystanders.

"And who—who is the exuberant young woman in blue?" queried Lena, with not quite a pretty smile.

"That, dear Lady Loveday," said Dick, quietly, as he handed his companion out on to terra firma, "that—is my wife!"—London World.

From the Science of Health.

A Cold in the Head.

A genuine cold is simply the closing of the pores of the surface, about seven millions in the human system, retaining a portion of the effete particles of the ever-decaying body, more or less poisonous, this retention necessarily antagonizing good health; the lungs—sustaining a very intimate relation to the skin—usually are more especially affected, performing some of the labors of the surface. It is usual, however, for the weaker parts of the system to take on diseased action, which is but another name for recuperative efforts, the efforts of nature, by apparently inimical means, pain-producing, ordinarily—by which to remove a real difficulty, not always observed by the victim. Some of these efforts are regarded by the masses as "colds in the head," while it is probable that not more than one in ten of these supposed colds have any connection with the closing of the pores. Most, if not all, of the irritation in the nasal passages, the inflammation of the mucous surfaces, not only of the nasal passages, but of the throat, etc., with the sores about the nose and on the lips, usually regarded as "cold sores," have their origin in a deranged state of the stomach, the inner surface of this organ having a similar appearance. As a result of improper dietetic habits, taking food very difficult of digestion, too much of ordinary food, or at improper times, eating so rapidly that it is not half masticated, some have a continuous "head cold" and are unable to breath with the mouth closed, thus inducing additional disease. The appropriate treatment of such supposed colds, etc., is the adoption of simple habits, careful dieting, making the grains and fruits more than usually prominent, eating flesh very sparingly—if at all—no pork, or any of the products of the filthy scavenger! In these modern, progressive times there are so many excellent, nutritious easily-digested, delicate and palatable preparations from the grains, that none need select food of a doubtful quality, these preparations being sold for far less than the popular luxuries, although they contain much more nourishment. These preparations may, with great propriety, constitute a part of the morning meal or the dinner, while the majority of all communities would be benefited by using them as the only food taken at the latter meal. Such a course, with due care in all respects, would soon remove that "all-gone feeling at the pit of the stomach," with other unpleasant sensations, when the "head colds" would also disappear. I will add that these supposed colds have led many persons to take undue care of the head, in contrast with the feet, which demand a great deal more attention as the means of warding off such dreaded evils, such as wearing fur caps or close hats, and in audiences covering the head when there may be the slightest air stirring, etc., while those of reasonable intellect and a normal amount of hair should have sufficient brain activity to keep the head as warm as it should be under ordinary circumstances.

DR. HANAFORD.

Management of Children.

If you would see a woman or a child graceful, beautiful or charming, you must find one that is loved. The child that dreads to be corrected or criticised for every word or movement never has a manner of elegance or an expression of charm. Fill your child's soul with an ideal of good manners, of benevolence and beauty; teach it abstractly to dislike vulgarity, selfishness, rudeness, and to feel that you love and adore it, and expect of it charming manners, and the work is accomplished.

It is impossible for a slave to have any style. If you would have your child dignified, you must treat it with dignity.

It is wrong to correct a child in public. Any proud child feels degraded by it. It should be a case of dire necessity when you find fault with a child before strangers, and to destroy a child's pride is to do him and irreparable injury. Take advantage of some intimate hour when parent and child are alone together, and then let the parent tenderly explain how the child has behaved ill the day before or that morning, and why the child's conduct was wrong, and how it should have behaved, and show the child that the parent respects and loves it, and believes in its capacity to do all good things. This will have ten times the effect of punishment, when the child is in a state of excitement and the parent usually angry.

Get in the habit of explaining the reason of things to your child. Let there be as little confusion in its mind as possible. Above all, keep the fact of your love uppermost in the child's mind, and let it understand that you have no wish to domineer over it, only that, being older and wiser, and loving the child so much, you would save it from its inexperience, and this is your duty, that you are teaching it to be its own master.

If your child is cross, do not punish him, but distract his mind from the subject that annoys him. If he continues to be cross, suspect his stomach, and assure yourself that this is in perfect order; a troubled digestion is the root of bad temper.—Harper's Bazar.

Wasps Ventilate Their Homes.

An English gentleman lately took a small wasps' nest, about the size of an apple, and, after stupefying its inmates, placed it in a large case inside of his house leaving an opening for egress through the wall. Here the nets was enlarged to a foot in diameter, holding thousands of wasps, and he was able to watch their movements, and noted one new fact namely, their systematic attention to ventilation. In hot weather, from four to six wasps were continually stationed at the hole of egress, and, while leaving space for entrance or exit, created a steady current of fresh air by the exceedingly rapid motion of their wings. After a long course of this vigorous exercise, the ventilators were relieved by other wasps. During cool weather, only two wasps at a time were usually thus engaged.—Golden Days.

Soaping a Railroad.

Once a western railroad company laid a rail over a widow's farm at quite a grade, and did not compensate her as she thought they should have done. About once a month she soaped the rails, checking the trains, and finally in this way brought the company to terms. Soap is a power in the world, and the monarch of all soaps is Brussels soap. It delighteth the heart and is a foe to uncleanliness. It's economical.

Gates on the Cars.

A writer who lives on the Providence division of the Old Colony road, who does not, like many others in Quincy, believe in the use of the platform gates on local trains, writes to the West Roxbury News, as follows:

"These appliances are, no doubt, well-intentioned on the part of the railroad, but in actual practice they defeat their own end by imposing unnecessary delay upon the moving of trains as well as upon passengers, and by exposing the latter to added and needless peril. This statement of the case is so obviously true that, so far as we are aware, no attempt has been made to refute it, nor have we known of a valid plea in favor of the system.

"In their last annual report the Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts, professing to regard the gates as a partial measure of safety, proceed to recite the dangers which obtain from their use, without adducing any argument to prove their desirability under existing conditions. Why cannot the management of the Old Colony road be led to see that, as our stations are situated, it is at once more convenient, and safer, for passengers to leave trains on the side nearest their destination, thus allowing them immediately to disperse and clear the track for approaching trains?"

Public Hospitals.

A writer to the Old Colony Memorial, speaking of the needs of hospitals, alludes very truthfully to the Quincy hospital:

"We are told that the great public and private curative institutions of New England and the country were never so hard "put to it" before in taking care of the numbers of people that are sent to them for treatment. Hospitals of every class and kind, public and private, special and general, are so crowded that it becomes necessary to hurry the removal of patients that ought really to occupy quarters in them much longer, that these places may be taken by the afflicted in far more desperate straits. The public hospital recently added to the institutions of Quincy, Mass., has already proved a benison upon humanity in those parts, and never was there an establishment that more rapidly or surely proved its quality and its usefulness than this. It was hardly finished when the terrible accident on the Old Colony railroad took place, almost before its very doors; and the wounded in that catastrophe were removed as fast as they were liberated from the ruins of the train to its friendly interior. In fact, this institution may be said to have been christened through that disaster; and all its capacities and abilities were called into full play at the outset in a way to demonstrate both the necessity that existed for its foundation and scope of its beneficence when in operation. By its services on the occasion of the railroad accident referred to, it enlisted the sympathies and the active cooperation of great numbers of people in its interests; and it is now one of the best cared for institutions of its class to be found anywhere. There is room for many more such establishments in Massachusetts; and it would doubtless astonish some pretty quiet and monotonous communities, could they have in their midst, the product of their own generosity and public spirit, a scheme of this kind to care for."

What Trained Senses Can Do.

The talk drifted to the education of the senses to a higher degree than common, and one man said: "It is remarkable how well a perfumer learns to recognize a scent. In testing a sweet-smelling liquid, he wets the base of his left thumb with a little of it. Then he rubs the place rapidly with his right hand. The alcohol in which the essence is dissolved, being the more volatile, is at once evaporated, and the substance which emits the odor, remaining behind, he can smell it in its purity.

"Of course it is an easy thing to recognize the principal odors that are in use, but when several are mixed, as is common, his task becomes more difficult. Yet a skilled man cannot only tell you what three or four perfumes enter into the composition of the one he is testing, but also roughly, the relative proportions of each.'

"It is easy to tell the relative amount of wool and cotton in a piece of colored underwear, when you know how," said another man. "Men who have made the subject a specialty can do this by holding the cloth in the light and looking along it. The cotton and wool can be distinguished by the difference in their colors, which exists, although the same dye was used for both. The untrained eye could hardly detect the fact that the cloth had two shades, but the skill that comes from long practice makes the thing simple."

Another of the party, who has had a great deal to do with books, told of the way in which he knew an English from an American book. "The books printed in England," he said, "in nearly every case have a pleasanter odor than those made here. The difference, is said to be largely due to the effect of the sea air, but the kind of paste, ink, paper and binding used probably has something to do with it. There is also a marked difference in the smell of books printed in this city. I would stake anything on my ability to recognize any book published by a certain house in this city, merely by putting the volume near my nose."—New York Tribune.

What is a Horse Power?

When men first begin to become familiar with the methods of measuring mechanical power they often speculate on where the breed of horses is to be found that can keep at work raising 33,000 pounds one foot per minute, or the equivalent, which is more familiar to some mechanics, of raising 330 pounds 100 feet per minute. Since 33,000 pounds raised one foot per minute is called one horse power, it is natural that people should think the engineers who established that unit of measurement based it on what horses could really do.

But the horse that can do this work does not exist. The horse power unit was established by James Watt about a century ago, and the figures were fixed in a curious way. Watt found that the average horse of his district could raise 22,000 pounds one foot per minute. This, then, was an actual horse power.

At that time Watt was employed in the manufacture of engines, and customers were so hard to find that all kinds of artificial inducements were necessary to induce power users to buy steam engines. As a method of encouraging them, Watts offered to sell engines reckoning 33,000 foot pounds to a horse power. And thus he was the means of giving a false unit to one of the most important measurements in the world.—New York Times.

Inauguration Day.

Very little or no stir is being made of the new city government inauguration, which will take place next Monday at 12 M.

The City Council of 1890 took no action, and Mayor Porter has not sent out invitations to past officials as in previous years. Some of the councilmen-elect may forget the day and hour.

The City Council provides in Section 10 that "the mayor-elect and the councilmen-elect shall annually, on the first Monday in January, at 12 o'clock at noon, meet and be sworn to the faithful discharge of their duties."

The Councilmen-elect are as follows. Those marked (*) are re-elected, and those with () have been members of the Council since the city government was inaugurated:

*E. W. HENRY BASS.
CHARLES M. BRYANT.
JOHN E. DRAKE.
*SILAS B. DUFFIELD.
*PETER T. FALLON.
CHARLES L. HAMMOND.
J. FRANCIS HAYWARD.
JOHN O. HOLDEN.
FREDERICK L. JONES.
DANIEL C. LITTLE.
*GEORGE W. MORTON.
STEPHEN O. MOXON.
THADDEUS H. NEWCOMB.
EDMUND POPE.
WILLIAM F. POWERS.
LESTER M. PRATT.
JOHN H. ROBERTS.
*CHARLES R. SHERMAN.
SAMUEL H. SPEAR.
JAMES THOMPSON.
* WILLIAM H. WARNER.

Last year the mayor was sworn first, then the councilmen. Rev. Edward Norton offered prayer. The inaugural address of Mayor Porter followed, and the ceremonies were over. Mayor Porter did not have the honor of being escorted to the platform by a mayor, but Mayor Fairbanks will probably have that distinction.

Immediately after the inauguration the City Council of 1891 will meet and organize and probably draw seats.

After the dignitaries have retired the Senate will be ready to organize itself.

Clerk's Grand Ball.

Wednesday was clerks' night off and they were in it for a good time, and if appearances count for anything they had it. There was the grocery clerk, the provision clerk, the apothecary clerk, the dry goods clerk and in fact clerks of all kinds dressed in their best bib and tucker. The ladies! yes, they were there too, dressed in their silks and satins all determined to see the old year out and the new year in.

The occasion of this gathering was the first annual ball of the Quincy Mercantile Clerks' Association, an organization formed for the purpose of cementing more closely the bonds of friendship among this useful class of people, and to create a fund from which there shall be paid to members who become incapacitated from duty by sickness or accident a weekly benefit. The object is certainly a worthy one and it is not to be wondered at, that the many people who come in contact with them should encourage their efforts by patronizing their first attempt in the entertainment line which was held at the Coliseum Wednesday evening.

The first thing on the programme was a grand promenade concert by the American band, which renderded the following selections:

1.	March,	Halcyon,	Reiger.
2.	Overture,	Southern Pastimes,	Catlin.
3.	"La Paloma,"		Missud.
4.	Concert Waltz,	Ninetta,	Bennett.
5.	Finale,	Presto,	Weigand.

The concert over, it was not many moments before the strains of the orchestra heralded the grand march which was led by Mr. Robert E. Foy, Chief Marshal, and Miss Jane Walsh, who wore a black fishernet lace over a lemon colored silk with short sleeves and V neck with a corsage boquet of roses. Following in their wake, were the floor directors, aids and some seventy-five couples.

The order of sixteen numbers was entered into with that spirit which characterizes this class of laborers, and the festivities were not allowed to lag until the early morning hours gave warning that a new year was upon them and it was time they left, that an hour's sleep might be had before entering upon the stern duties of life once more.

The affair was a complete success and reflects great credit upon the managers, and a snug sum will doubtless be added to the treasury.

A Sudden Death.

Mr. William T. Curtis, who resided on Union street, passed away suddenly Monday morning about 6 o'clock of pneumonia, after a short illness.

He went to Boston a week ago Saturday on business and on returning complained of being very cold. He retired and in the night had a chill which lasted for an hour or more; and from that time to his death he gradually failed. Dr. Hallowell was called and he gave the case his closest attention, but the disease had fastened itself so firmly that he was unable to stay its progress.

Mr. Curtis was born in Weymouth, and when a young man came to Quincy and married the daughter of the late Timothy Gay; and has lived nearly ever since in this place. He built a pretty French roof cottage on Union street, where he has resided for many years.

Mr. Curtis has for a long time been foreman of Graham's boot factory, where he was highly appreciated and had many friends. He attended the Universalist church and was clerk of the Society. He was a worthy member of the Mount Wollaston Lodge of Odd Fellows and had filled with honor and credit many important positions in said lodge. Nye sang finely several impressive solos. The Mount Wollaston Lodge of Odd Fellows, of which deceased was a member, took charge of the funeral. His remains were placed in the receiving tomb at Mount Wollaston Cemetery.

Grand Army Installation.

A public installation of officers elect of Paul Revere Post 88, G. A. R., took place Thursday evening in Hancock hall. It was not public in the general sense of the word, but was more of a family gathering, the invited guests including only the members of Paul Revere Woman's Relief Corps, the Sons of Veterans, the Mayor, the Mayor-elect, and one or two prominent citizens.

The installing officer was Past Commander W. L. Gage of Braintree, assisted by Comrade Monk as officer of the day. The new officers, elective and appointive, are as follows:

Commander,—John D. Williams.
Senior Vice,—Charles L. Orne.
Junior Vice,—Franklin Curtis.
Surgeon,—H. C. Hallowell.
Chaplain,—W. P. Martin.
Quartermaster,—A. W. Gardner.
Officer of the Day,—Warren Dunbar.
Officer of the Guard,—W. J. Young.
Adjutant,—Horace O. Souther.
Sergeant Major,—W. W. Penniman.
Quartermaster Sergeant,—E. M. Litchfield.

Commander Williams briefly thanked the installing officers, and introduced Senior Vice Commander Orne as presiding officer. On the platform were Capt. Bowker, of the Sons of Veterans, and President Souther and Senior Vice President Crane, of the Relief Corps, and the other invited guests who will be introduced later.

Installing Officer Gage was first called upon, but with a few remarks he excused himself thinking he had talked enough.

Comrade Monk spoke of the fraternal feeling existing between the local Post and Post 87 of Braintree.

A. B. Barrows was introduced, and gave humorous account of Jim Bullseye's visit to the National Encampment at Boston. He also read two other selections during evening.

Mayor-elect Fairbanks made a pleasing speech. The Grand Army, he said, should have the moral support and sympathy of the citizens. It was an association bound to the past by patriotic ties. He well knew the arduous duties of officers of any organization, but the success depends on their skill and assiduity to manage. Comrades can encourage their officers by regular attendance.

E. E. Williamson said the happiest and most prosperous years of the country were since the war; and the people of today owe everything to the soldiers. He recalled the prominent part Quincy men took, and their great sufferings.

Letters of regrets were read from Rev. Edward Norton and Rev. H. E. Cotton, but one of the three ministers invited was present. In introducing Rev. D. M. Wilson the chairman alluded to an old saying that the ministers and ladies were responsible for the war. He said that might be for the ladies had a sense of what was right, which was shared in some measure by the ministers. They hailed the success of the war. The whole heart and soul to the G. A. R. was "comradeship." He regretted that he did not share that comradeship, but it was because he was not old enough. He then told of another boy and himself starting for the war armed with carving knives and a hatchet; they tramped from Dorchester to Charlestown, where they were unable to get food or shelter at night, but were finally cared for by the police and returned home the next day.

Mayor Porter gave some war history of 28 years ago, the battle of Murfreesboro, Tenn., and the critical situation. The soldiers, he said, need the cheering support of the people. The happiness and prosperity which the country enjoys we owe to them.

The gathering of 100 or more was then invited to the banquet hall, where a turkey supper was served under the direction of the Post's caterer, George H. Osborne. His suppers are always good and this was no exception.

Willard Contractors Embarrased.

The contractors for the new Willard school house are financially embarrassed.

Messrs. Cushing are known to have taken the contract at a very low price, and for this reason have been favored as to time. A review of the bids will be of interest.

The creditors of I. H. & E. H. Cushing, contractors and builders, South Hingham, Mass., held a meeting in Boston, Tuesday. E. H. Cushing of the firm was present and made the following statement of the liabilities and assets: Total liabilities, $46,036.90, of which amount $2100 is owed to carpenters and masons. The assets of the firm nominally amount to $11,599.05, included in this is $7500, due for work done on the Willard schoolhouse at Quincy. There are some individual assets, I. H. Death of an Estimable Lady.

Mr. Rufus Foster and children mourn the loss of an estimable wife and loving mother.

Shortly before Thanksgiving Mrs. Foster and her daughter Mary started for Colorado to surprise Mr. and Mrs. Warren F. Page, nee Susie C. Foster, and pass the holidays with them. It was a happy reunion. Soon, however, the great change in climate aggravated a heart trouble of Mrs. Foster's, and her Quincy friends learned she was seriously ill. It was decided to bring her home. She tarried on the way at Omaha and Chicago, reaching this city Tuesday evening. Her daughters accompanied her as far as Chicago and then returned. Ex-Councilman Frank B. Foster met his mother at Chicago and came home with her.

She rallied after reaching home, and Thursday, when Mr. Foster went to Boston, she was not considered dangerous, but was seized by a pain in the heart and expired shortly after nine o'clock.

Mr. and Mrs. Foster were among the most hospitable families in town, and had a very large circle of friends. The deceased was prominent in all progressive movements, especially those connected with the First church.

She was in her 60th year, and leaves a loving husband, two daughters and four sons, and grandchildren.

A party of our young people took a long New Year's Eve sleigh ride and report a jolly good time.

Christmas day was kept at Memorial church by a festival at 4 P. M. at which the children at the Sunday school were amused with games and feasted with cake, ice cream and fruit. At 6.00 the chapel was filled by adults and children to witness the operetta "Jingle Bells" and see the fruit taken from the tree. Santa Claus and his wife came down the chimney, and everybody found a gift on the tree.

Among the special gifts was a purse of money to Rev. J. H. Yeoman, from the parishoners, piano lamp to organist, H. H. Bemis, from the congregation, art books to superintendent C. F. Merrick, from the teachers of the Sunday school, a purse of money to janitor, Nat Churchill, from the Ladies' Benevolent Society. Cheers were given for Hon. Henry H. Faxon.

Mr. Thomas Gurney presented the school with candy, oranges and bananas.

Timberlake & Small made a gift of cash to help pay for the ice cream.

The snow storm suspended the work on Hancock street for a time.

Mr. George Hinkley is at his home seriously ill.

Misses Tebeau and Thomas, of Atlantic are reported as improving.

Miss I. F. P. Emery has been confined to the house by illness, but is now convalescent.

The Sunday school of the church of the Sacred Heart, held its Christmas festival and tree Tuesday evening. The exercises consisted of speaking and singing.

It is wonderful what an effect the new hall is having on the people of Atlantic. The old and the middle aged are renewing their youth, and the young are enjoying good times.

A decidedly jolly party of sixteen young people of Atlantic celebrated New Year's eve by a merry sleighing party, returning home before old Father Time had made his farewell to 1890.

Once more Music hall has been the scene of a gay and very pretty social party, it being the occasion of a reception given by the above named club to their friends. The affair took place on Wednesday, New Year's eve, and it is safe to say a more lively and happy company could not be brought together. It was quite a dress affair and some of the toilets of the ladies present were very attractive.

A formal reception was held from 8 to 8.30, after which the party seated themselves at the twelve card tables, where whist was enjoyed for two hours. The results of this pleasure secured to Miss Susie Day, of Neponset, the first ladies' prize, in the form of a very choice bon-bon dish. Mr. George Briggs of Atlantic, having the highest score for the gentlemen, received a handsome paper cutter, while Dr. W. G. Kendall was forced to accept the booby—and the sympathy of his friends. The ladies' booby prize being taken by Mrs. Louis Rinn.

Ice cream and cake were served, after which the floor was cleared for the merry dance which was kept up into the "wee sma' hours" of 1891.

Altogether it was the social event of the season in Atlantic thus far, and the members of the Harmony Whist club were congratulated on its perfect success in every way.

WOLLASTON.

A business meetimg of the Y's of Wollaston was held at the home of the President, Miss Emma Sparrow, last Saturday evening. A considerable amount of business was disposed of, after which half an hour was devoted to a parliamentary drill which was greatly enjoyed by all present. The next meeting will be held Saturday evening, January 10th at 7.30, at the home of Miss Sparrow, and as the annual election of officiers will take place at that time, it is hoped that all the members will make an effort to be present.

P. J. Newman and family of Minneapolis have taken a house on Farrington street.

Capt. William H. Whelan, of Boston, held the attention of a large audience for an hour at the Wollaston Congregational church Sunday evening, with an interesting and thrilling sketch of his own life. He is a man of remarkable oratorical powers and impresses one as a man who believes in what he says. His subject was "Pitfalls and how to avoid them. Rev. Edward A. Robinson presided.

Mr. E. C. McClintock, the superintendent of the Wollaston Congregational Sunday school, was presented Sunday, at the close of the services, by Rev. Edward A. Robinson, on behalf of the school, with a gold watch and chain.

William Grant of Wollaston has been granted a pension.

The installation of the officers of Wollaston Lodge Knights of Honor by District Deputy Grand Dictator Hersey, will take place on Monday evening. After the installation, supper will be served in the Perry hall. Speeches will be made by all of the prominent members of that order, in Wollaston.

A very pleasant sociable was held in the new Baptist chapel, at Wollaston, on Thursday evening. The supper, which was served at seven o'clock, was followed after an hours social chat by a short entertainment consisting of a a flute solo, by Miss Ripley with a piano accompaniment by Miss Florence G. O[illegible]ey, and a recitation by Miss Fannie Beckwith.

Funeral services over the remains of the late Edward L. Russell was held Thursday at 2.30 o'clock, at the residence of his parents on Winthrop avenue, Wollaston. Rev. Mr. Hornbroke of Newton and Rev. D. M. Wilson of Quincy, officiating. The services were attended by a large number of his friends and associates. There was a large display of floral pieces which were very handsome. The burial was at Mt. Wollaston cemetery.

The Wollaston Baptist Sunday school held a concert on Sunday afternoon. The chorus singing under Mr. A. D. Albee's direction deserves especial notice.

Notwithstanding the coldness of the day the church was filled. The programme appeared in Monday's LEDGER.

A goodly number of ladies and gentlemen availed themselves of the privilege of attending the annual convention of the Norfolk County W. C. T. union, held in the Congregational church, Wollaston, Wednesday.

Edward Locke Russell, one of Quincy's rising young business men, passed away Monday afternoon at the residence of his parents at Wollaston, after an illness of three weeks of rheumatism of the heart, aged 21 years.

Woodbine lodge, Knights and Ladies of Honor of Wollaston watched the old year out and the new year in.

The firm of Leland, Rice & Co. of Boston is succeeded by Rice, Sayward & Whitten. Mr. W. S. Sayward is a resident of Wollaston.

The Ladies Aid Society of the Unitarian church will meet with Mrs. C. W. Smith, Arlington street, Wednesday afternoon, Jan. 7, at two o'clock. A full attendance is desired for the annual election of officers.

The vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church was crowded with a happy company of young people on Wednesday evening. They were all members of the Faxon Loyal Legion, and this was the evening set apart by Mr. Faxon, on which they should receive the presents from him, for the noble work which they had done the past year in behalf of the great battle against intemperance. The children were all in hopes of meeting that modern representative of good old Saint Nick. They were disappointed. Mr. Faxon was unable to be present.

Wollaston is the banner temperance ward of the city, and well it might be, with such an active band of workers. Some time ago, Mrs. John N. Emerson, the superintendent, offered four prizes to the members of the Legion for those securing the largest number of honorary members. Albert Powell won the first prize, with a list of forty-one honorary members to his credit, Mabel Newcomb came second with twenty-four new names, Algie Burchstead third with eleven names, and Bennie Thomas and Fred Ramsey divide the honors of winning the fourth prize, each having ten new pledges.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

The longest continuous session of a Quincy City Council was that held Monday evening, which was the last of the Council of 1890. The important matter under consideration was the water report on a new supply which the present Council was determined to adopt before it adjourned sine die. This subject and the application of firemen for an increase, drew the largest audience present at any Council meeting during the year.

The Councilmen absent were Messrs. Faunce, Graham and Read.

The reading of the records was begun and suspended.

An application of J. J. Dowd for State Aid was referred to the Council of 1891.

Finance,—Recommended order making transfer of $300 to public buildings and $450 to advertising, printing and stationery. Adopted.

Public Buildings,—Reference to the next Council of the following matters: Ward room in Ward Three, claim of rent for Chemical house land at Houghs Neck, and change in blackboards in the new Willard schoolhouse.

Fire Department,—Reference to the next Council of the following matters: Petition for water for fire purposes in Ward Four; for hydrants on Beale street, Standish avenue, Newbury avenue, on new plains in Ward Three. Accepted.

Claims,—An order appropriating $150 in settlement of claim of James C. Bates for damages. An amendment of Councilman Sherman to make the amount $250 was lost and the order passed to be ordained.

Adopted.

Special on Boundary Line,—Reported findings on recent preambulation of Quincy and Braintree line. Adopted.

At this point Councilman Green moved that when the Council adjourn it be to Thursday evening. Adopted.

The Brooks.

Upon motion of Councilman Burke the report of the Commissioner of Public Works on Town and Furnace brooks and the whole subject matter, were taken from the table and referred to the incoming government.

City Solicitor Again.

Councilman Sherman offered an order amending the ordinance concerning salaries by increasing the salary of the City Solicitor from $500 to $750.

The order was favored by Councilman Thompson and opposed by Councilmen Shea and Green.

Amendment lost 8 to 9.

Councilman Thompson then moved an amendment making the amount $700.

This was opposed by Councilmen Burke, Green and Shea and favored by Councilman Sherman, and prevailed 10 to 6.

City Treasurer.

An order amending the ordinance, increasing the salary of the City Treasurer from $600 to $700 was adopted.

Firemen Remembered.

Upon motion of Councilman Green, seconded by Councilman Jones, Section 10 of the Fire Department ordinance was amended by increasing the salaries of the call men of Hose 2 and 4, and of Chemical 2 from $25 to $37.50.

Calendar.

The order to borrow $60,000 in anticipation of taxes of 1890 was passed to be ordained.

The order making transfers to pay for repair of Steamer was passed to be ordained.

Resolutions to President Fairbanks.

Councilman Duffield offered the following resolutions:

RESOLVED,—That this Council deserves to put on record its appreciation of the dignity and courtesy with which its retiring chairman has conducted the meetings of the city government.

RESOLVED,—That we believe that the same courteous and honorable relations will continue, and that an unpartisan administration can be confidently expected in the higher office to which he has been called as Mayor of the City of Quincy.

RESOLVED,—That we extend to him our best wishes in his new appointment, and pledge ourselves as Councilmen and citizens to uphold him in all matters that pertain to the greatest good of the greatest number.

President Fairbanks resigned the chair to Councilman Thompson, and briefly acknowledged the compliment paid him.

Upon motion of Councilman Burke the resolutions were accepted and ordered to be spread upon the records.

Unfinished Business.

Councilman Jones offered a motion with reference to a petition for a hydrant which had been overlooked, that it be referred to next Council.

President Fairbanks motion to refer all unfinished business to the next Council prevailed.

A motion to take the water report from the table was made, but the preceding motion was thought to shut it off, and to get out of the dilemma it was rescinded.

Water Report.

The motion of Councilman Burke to take the water report from the table then prevailed.

Councilman Burke then presented Engineer Blake.

Councilman Sherman asked by what right.

Councilman Newcomb moved that Engineer Blake be requested to take the floor to answer any question that Councilmen might propound. This was amended to extend to citizens the privilege to ask questions and prevailed.

Engineer Blake was then asked by Councilman Newcomb if he had read the report of the last Council meeting, and whether he took exception to any of the statements of the Councilmen. He said he had read the account in the PATRIOT, which had the reputation of giving accurate reports, and he must say that he had been grossly misrepresented by certain Councilmen. Engineers could not afford to make misrepresentations, and his report was the result of very careful study. One gentleman had stated that the water shed of the Quincy Water Company was five square miles, when the fact was it was less than three.

Dr. Faxon here interrupted Mr. Blake and attempted to raise a point of order, but he was ruled out of order and reluctantly took his seat.

Engineer Blake finishing, Dr. Faxon was given an opportunity, and he queried if the business before the Council was a new system and if so, if criticism on the present company was not out of order.

President Fairbanks, then on the floor, thought it was not the privilege of any citizen to raise a point of order in the Council, and the president pro tem so ruled.

Engineer Blake continuing, said it was an entire perversion of his report to say that the proposed water shed encroached on that of either Braintree or Milton, for it did not. In fact the report said it was not included. Regarding Blue Hill river, he said to his personal knowledge it was not dry the past summer. Regarding the pipes in use by the Quincy Company, a Councilman had claimed that the same kind of pipes had been in use in San Francisco for forty years, but this was impossible as it had been manufactured only thirteen years.

In answer to Councilman Newcomb, Engineer Blake denied that his instructions were to hunt up any kind of a supply, and to ignore the present system. That had he thought it advisable, he would have recommended the purchase of the present works.

Councilman Sherman had prepared a little catechism something like this:

Do you not think that your time could have been better expended, so far as the maps is concerned by illustrating more fully the source of supply, place for reservoir, etc., even at the expense of omitting such a detailed display of piping, hydrants, etc.? Ans. Will leave that to the judgment of the Council.

Considering the question purely as a business one, and that the outlay is so great, can this source of supply be of any value if water cannot be obtained there in sufficient quantity? Ans. Water can be obtained, so the question is not pertinent.

Would you consider a place where only one and one-half million gallons daily could be obtained a proper one to be worked at an expense for plant of $400,000, and at a cost of $30,000 yearly forever after? Ans. Assumption is wrong, hence question is impertinent.

Considering that the cost of the whole works under your plan is $422,000, of which the filter gallery is only $26,000, would it not be better to construct the filter galleries first and work the pump for a year to find if the water will hold out? Ans. No; capacity will be settled first.

Have you made sufficient tests, either by boring or pumping, to find if the water in sufficient quantities can be had at this place? Ans. Enough to satisfy me.

Would you as a member and stockholder of a private company, on information such as you have obtained being presented by another engineer, recommend an outlay of $400,000 for this water supply, if you could not, in addition to what water can be had from the meadow draw from Braintree Great Pond? Ans. If I was honestly interested in procuring a supply I should consider source first and cost afterward.

Do you believe the city of Quincy will be allowed to construct filter galleries to draw water from Great Pond? Ans. This is not proposed nor mentioned.

If Milton should take Houghton's pond watershed, and the land on the Blue Hill river west of the Taunton turnpike, would there be any other place to make the reservoir? Ans. The proposed reservoir does not concern Houghton's pond.

Have you surveyed Houghton's pond watershed to ascertain its area? If not, where do you get your figures? Ans. Yes.

Have you any idea what the cost would be to prepare the Houghton's pond reservoir for the holding of water,—say for one and one-quarter billion gallons? Say about how much per yard? Ans. Not estimated in such terms.

Councilman Slade asked Engineer Blake what systems he had built, and he named a dozen or twenty, including Dedham, Rutland and Dover N. H. The last was the largest of construction, and none were as expensive as Quincy, but this was because there were fewer miles of streets.

Engineer Blake was asked by Councilman Slade if his analyses on page 28 did not show Quincy water in the reservoir to be better than in North Attleboro, Northampton and Newton, in that the total residue was less. He replied that the impurities were not judged so much by that column as the next, "loss by ignition," which was much larger in the Quincy water than others.

Councilman Duffield asked if the engineer would be willing to bond himself to furnish the estimated supply of water, and was answered in the affirmative.

It was 10.30 and Councilman Newcomb moved the previous question, but Councilmen Sherman and Duffield opposed applying the gag rule, and Mr. Blake having lost his train, the motion was withdrawn.

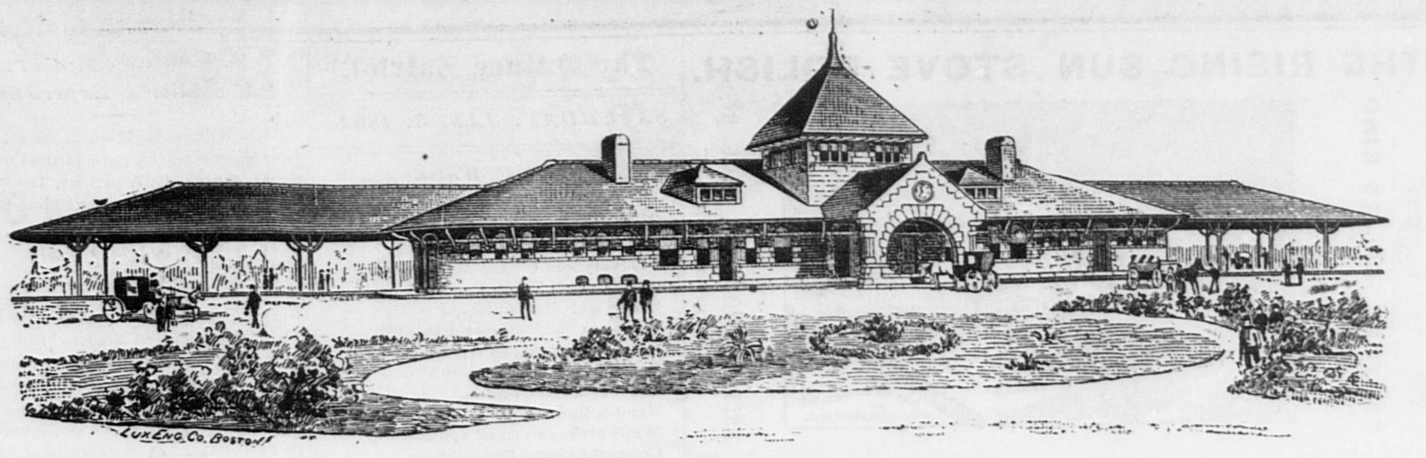
H. H. Faxon, Dr. Faxon and Councilman Slade propounded more questions, and Councilman Sherman closed in a fifteen minute speech in which he criticised the map, standing committees, and Councilman Burke.

Councilman Burke replied to the attack on him, and moved the previous question.

Councilman Slade used up the time allowed for debate, and it was then voted that the main question be now put.

The report and order requesting the Mayor to petition the Legislature were adopted.

The motion to adjourn to Thursday evening was reconsidered on motion of Councilman Green, and at 11.20 on motion of Councilman Burke, the Council of 1890 adjourned sine die.



THE NEW OLD COLONY RAILROAD STATION AT FALL RIVER.

The above cut, loaned us by the Fall River News, represents the new passenger station the Old Colony Railroad Company is building at Bowenville in that city. As Quincy is one of the best paying stations on the road, and much in need of a better depot, our citizens can reasonably expect in the near future a beautiful, commodious station, similar to the above engraving, in our city.

The Old Colony has recently purchased of Mr. H. H. Faxon quite an addition to their real estate at the Quincy station, and we have no doubt the company are making arrangements to give Quincy a fine depot in the near future.

What is much needed in these many stormy days, also in the hot summer, are long, covered platforms, extended from the main building, similar to those shown in the cut.

The Fall River station is to be a model one in every respect. The main structure will be of Milford granite, with dark red freestone trimmings, the general effect being one of massiveness, solidity and simple treatment. The roofs will be of dark purple slate, and the entire outside wood work of massive yellow pine, finished in natural colors.

The conveniently arranged interior will be finished in dark red oak, with arched ceilings, and all the rooms will be commodious and attractive. The building will be finished by July.

Which One is True?

QUINCY, Dec. 30, 1890.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

On Dec. 15, Mr. Blake, in answer to a question asked by Councilman Slade, declared that neither in his instructions from, nor in conversation with the committee on Sewers and Drains, nor with any member thereof, was the Quincy Water Company ever mentioned. In this statement he was corroborated by Councilman Newcomb.

On Dec. 29, Mr. Blake, in answer to a question asked by Councilman Newcomb as to his instructions, declared, that he had been instructed by the committee on Sewers and Drains to examine the Works and Water Shed of the Quincy Water Company, and report in favor of the purchase of the Company's property if he could conscientiously do so; and in this statement also, he was corroborated by Councilman Newcomb.

If either of these statements are true, which one is it? W. L. FAXON.

School Committee.

The School Committee of 1890 held a special meeting on Friday evening of last week, at which there were present Messrs. Claflin, Cotton, Crane, Gordon and Sheahan.

The sub-committee to draft the annual report, Messrs. Claflin and Sheahan, submitted their work, which secured the endorsement of the members present.

The following resolutions offered by Dr. Gordon were unanimously adopted and the secretary was directed to transmit a copy of the same to the chairman of the board, who was absent from the meeting:

WHEREAS, this is probably the last meeting of the present committee, and whereas Mr. Sylvester Brown, our chairman will now cease to serve the board, be it resolved that we tender him a frank expression of our appreciation of the unfailing courtesy, good nature and ability that have always characterized his services as chairman and express our regrets that he can render them no longer; and that the secretary be instructed to make this resolution a part of the record of the evening.

The committee adjourned sine die.

The Comic Opera.

The story of Miles Standish' courtship is one that has always interested the lovers of poetry and tradition, and the fact that it is to be given in Quincy for the benefit of the City Hospital, will certainly insure good houses. The story which has been arranged in the opera by Mr. Surrette, will be told by some of our best singers assisted by the finest Boston talent. When it was played last winter in the neighboring towns, the houses which greeted the production were crowded every night. Its fame has preceded it; and we predict that there will be few here who will miss the treat, and those few will be very sorry.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. Scribner's Magazine

For the coming year will be noteworthy for a number of special features which the Publishers believe are of very unusual interest, and among them the following may be mentioned:

Sir Edwin Arnold

contributes to the December number the first of a series of four Articles upon Japan, its people, its ways, and its thoughts. Mr. Robert Blum, who was commissioned to go to Japan for Scribner's Magazine, has prepared a very remarkable series of drawings to illustrate Sir Edwin's papers. Articles upon the recent Japanese Festival will follow, illustrated by Mr. Blum.

Henry M. Stanley

has prepared for the January number an important article upon "The Pigmies of the Great African Forest." Another contribution in this field will be Mr. J. Scott Keltie's account of the recent African Exhibition held in London. Both papers will be amply illustrated.

The Wrecker,

Serial Novel by Robert Louis Stevenson and Lloyd Osbourne, will run through a large part of the year. Illustrated by Hole. A two-part story by Frank R. Stockton will also appear.

Prof. James Bryce, M. P.,

author of "The American Commonwealth," will write a series of Four Articles upon India, embodying the results of his recent journey and studies on this land of never-ending interest.

Ocean Steamships

will be the subject of an important series somewhat upon the lines of the successful Railroad Articles. "Passenger Travel," "The Life of Officers and Men," "Speed and Safety Devices," and "Management," are some of the subjects touched upon and illustrated.

Great Streets of the World is the title of a novel collection of articles on which the author and artist will collaborate to give the characteristics of famous thoroughfares. The first, on Broadway, will be written by Richard Harding Davis, and illustrated by Arthur B. Frost. Others will follow on Piccadilly, London; Boulevard, Paris; The Corso, Rome.

The price of Scribner's Magazine admits of adding a subscription to one's other reading at very small cost. Orders should be sent at once.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, JAN. 3, 1891.

Ladies' Whist.

Respectfully dedicated to the Young Ladies' Whist Club of Quincy.

"Is it my lead?" asks the first,
"Well, of all hands, I've the worst."
"Dear me! if I only knew
What you had," chirps number two.
"Now I can't say, on the whole.
That this play accords with Pole.
But it is the best I have."
Number three says, mild and suave.
While above this small uproar
Comes the chorus from all four,
"What's the trump!"

"Miss Bown, is that your ace?"
"Oh, say, have you seen the lace
Selling now at Bown and Dart's?"
"I forgot that she trumps hearts."
"And the most exquisite shade—
Gracious! haven't you a spade?"
"Is it my play? What was led?"
"Do you know you can get thread
Only four cents?—John Smith's best"—
Just here chime in all the rest,
"What's the trump?"

"This I think the leading spade.
Oh! I thought jack was played."
"Well, that makes two points for you,
One for us did you say Flo?"
"How can that be? Did you trump?"
"Have you heard about the bump Lizzie's boy had on his head?"
"Isn't that a lovely spread?"
"Did I take that trick? Dear me!"
Here strike in the other three,
"What's the trump?"

"How much better we all play
Than we did. Well, I should say!"
"Once I couldn't keep my mind
On the game, but now I find
It is as easy as can be."
"Is it your deal? Let me see—
No; the cards belong to you."
"I remember now that Flo
Led the King, and that the nine—
Did you say the lead was mine—
"What's the trump?"

—Judge.

One cup butter, two cups sugar, one cup molasses, two eggs, two teaspoons cream tartar, one heaping teaspoon each of cinnamon, cloves and allspice, one nutmeg, one pound of raisins, stoned and chopped a little, and rolled in flour, one-half pound of currants, five or six ounces citron, one teaspoon soda dissolved in one cup of milk. Add flour to make a stiff dough. Test by baking a small portion first.

A married man once said: "I would rather hold a currycomb argument with the heels of a mule than to beat my wife three straight games of euchre, or say a word against Brussels soap."

Anecdotes.

"John," said the Rev. Mr. Goodman to his hired man, "are you a Christian?"

"Why—er—no, sir," replied John.

"Do you ever swear?"

"I'm sometimes a little keerless like in my talk."

"I am sorry, John," rejoined Mr. Goodman. "But we will converse about this some other time. I wish you would take this money and settle this bill of $4 for thawing out a water pipe, and talk to the man in a careless kind of way as if it were your own bill."

Official—"You cannot stay in this country sir."

Traveller—"No sir."

"I hope to pay my board regularly, Mrs. Hashleigh," said young Counterskip. "I should be very much put out if I missed a payment."

"You certainly would, Mr. Counterskip, replied Mrs. Hashleigh, meaningly.

Mrs. Jinks (meaningly)—I asked Dr. Aquapura if whiskey was good for colds and he said "No."

Mr. Jinks—Well, I don't believe I've got a cold, anyhow. It's something else. Did the doctor mention what diseases whiskey was good for?"

Adonis—"There's one thing I couldn't stand, and that's a wife who would be eternally putting her hair up in curl papers."

Matronly Friend—"Have no fear, Mr. Adonis. Girls don't go to any such trouble after they get married.

Wiggins—"You're looking poorly, Jack—really miserable."

Jack Hardup—"No wonder, when you consider the diet I've been living on for the past month."

Wiggins—"Boarding-house?"

Jack Hardup—"Naw—'uncle!' I've been eating up my summer clothes."—Life.

The two men had talked for a time on the train. "Are you going to hear Barkins lecture tonight?" said one.

"Yes, replied the other.

"Take my advice and don't. I hear it's an awful bore."

"I must go," said the other. "I'm Barkins."

For the Patriot.

A Soldier's Experience.

Capt. William H. Whelan, the celebrated newspaper reporter, gave in the Congregational church at Wollaston, last Sunday evening, one of the most thrilling personal experiences we have ever heard. Enlisting when a mere boy, in 1861, in the 15th Massachusetts, he served in nearly all the battles of the Peninsula, ending with the fearful carnage in Burnside's assault on Marie Heights before Fredericksburg, where he was terribly wounded and left for dead, but found next night and treated by a friendly surgeon, who gave him his first drink of whiskey. As he slowly recovered, this vile treatment was continued, until an appetite was formed which he could not control, and which eventually brought him, as such surgical treatment did thousands of our brave boys, to become a drunken sot.

We learn that Capt. Whelan is expected to speak again soon in one of the churches in Quincy Centre. We earnestly wish that the "boys," young and old, might hear him show up the "manly custom of treating," and the consequences of attempting to maintain respectability in the company of fast associates. Quincy's Sunday Schools.

In looking over the returns of the Sunday schools in Quincy as made to H. H. Faxon, I find the old Episcopal Church Society gives the number 242, the largest number but one,—the Congregationalist, which has 359. We are pleased to know this fact, for the Episcopal society was the first in Quincy to have a Sunday school in a church. This was about the year 1821, when some ladies of the family of John Marston gathered a few children in the church and taught them on Sunday mornings. The writer of this, who, previous to that time, attended meetings at the Unitarian church, well remembers the small company of children that gathered around the little sheet-iron stove and listened to the kind teachers.

The Unitarians did not, at that time, believe in Sunday schools, and I think it was eight or ten years after this before there was any other Sunday school in Quincy. During these years there was no Congregational "Orthodox" church, as it was then called, in Quincy; now it appears to have the largest number of scholars of any Protestant church in this city. This church was organized in 1832. It numbered five men, most of them of very limited means, and about fifteen women. The late Dr. John Codman, who helped organize this church, said some years after that "it was the feeblest child that he ever knew to live."

The Congregational church deserve the success it has had, for this church took an early and decided stand in favor of the temperance cause and also the anti-slavery movement. Its pulpit was open to anti-slavery lecturers and its house to anti-slavery meetings, when many others were closed against them. Among the speakers invited to its pulpit was Rev. Charles T. Torrey, who died in Baltimore jail for assisting slaves to escape from the bondage of American slavery, "one hour of which," Thomas Jefferson said, "was fraught with more misery than ages of that which our fathers arose in rebellion to oppose. Frederick Douglass and Milton Clark, fugitive slaves, were given opportunity to be heard in this church; and I am glad to hear that they lead in the number of Sunday school scholars. H. W. B.

Boston Theatres.

Hollis Street.

Following E. H. Sothern at the Hollis comes that very popular and laughable comedy "All the Comforts of a Home" by William Gillette. This comedy, when played at the Boston Museum last winter drew immense houses at every performance and has met with like success wherever produced. It will be presented next week with its big New York cast and for one week only. Matinees Wednesday and Saturday afternoons. Tickets are now on sale for the week.

Boston.

All good things come to an end sooner or later, and thus it is with "The Soudan" at the Boston Theatre, for after one week more it will be withdrawn to make way for "The Crystal Slipper," which is announced for Jan. 12th. "The Crystal Slipper" will be presented by the Chicago Opera House extravaganza company, and is one of the most brilliant spectacular plays ever put upon the stage.

Tremont.

Laughter has been the watchword at the Tremont the past week, and Nat Goodwin has received a most hearty greeting from large audiences. "The Nominee" is preceded by the one act comedy, "The Viper on the Hearth," a very interesting little piece. A sketch of "The Nominee" was given in our issue last week, so it is sufficient now for us to say that Mr. Goodwin's character just suits him, and his company is remarkably good. Next Monday, Jan. 5th, will commence the second and last week of the engagement, the same bill being presented.

Boston Museum.

A large audience greeted the new plays at the Museum last Monday night. "Betty's Finish," a new one act comedy by Mr. Clyde Fitch was first presented and Miriam O'Leary made a decided hit in the leading role. "The Solicitor" is a jolly three act farce, written by J. H. Darnley and presented for the first time in America on Monday night. It is full of fun and sparkle. The same bill is announced for this afternoon and evening also for next week.

Catarrh in the Head.

"I want to tell how much good Hood's Sarsaparilla has done me. I have suffered with catarrh in my head for years, and paid out hundreds of dollars for medicines, but have heretofore received only temporary relief. Finally I thought I would try a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla. It helped me so much that I decided to keep on. Before I began taking it I was very weak, had a trembling feeling, and had a bowel complaint most of the time. My eyes were so sore that I could not sew or read much. But now my catarrh is nearly cured, the weakness and trembling feeling are all gone, my appetite is good—in fact, I feel like another person. I have gained in flesh so much that every one speaks of it, saying: 'Why, how healthy you are looking!' I have recommended Hood's Sarsaparilla to a number of friends, and it is doing them good. It is the best medicine I have ever taken, and is the only one that did me permanent good." Mrs. Alfred Cunningham, Fallon Avenue, Providence, Rhode Island.

"P. S.—When I wrote the above I did not think of having my letter published. I wrote because I felt so grateful for the good Hood's Sarsaparilla had done me. But you have my permission to publish it, with my name, if you wish. I hope it will induce some other afflicted ones to try your valuable medicine." Mrs. A. C.

Prohibition.

The Republican and Democratic platforms have both been strangely silent on the prohibition question this fall. It is the ominous lull before a storm. As said Judge East, of Tennessee: "We have two parties, every plank in whose platform is either slippery elm or dogwood."

The President of the United States Senate, John J. Ingalls, of Kansas, makes this declaration:

> "Politics has no place for the decalogue or the golden rule. All is fair in politics. The purification of politics is an iridescent dream."

Beer and boodle are partners today in both the big parties (for none is great except the little prohibition.) The recent elections emphasize the people's disapproval of high tariff and the force bill, neither of which measures was endorsed by the prohibition party. The farmers are the Samsons in politics today, and are the mightiest single force in the land for prohibition. This year the Democrats have obeyed Charles A. Dana's exhortation, "Get together." May prohibitionists and farmers be as wise in 1892. The party of reform is marshalling its legions. Wait for the wagon, the solid old farm wagon, and we'll all take a ride. The farmers are our natural allies. They have never led the country to anything but good. They and the women are home's chief defense today against the dram shop. A farmer's daughter, and proud of the name, I stretch out a sisterly hand, in your behalf, to the Farmers' Alliance everywhere. Who knoweth if they and we become unto the kingdom for such a time as this?

The Farmers' Alliance and the Prohibitionists both face the same way. They ought to cast the same ballot. In North Dakota they do this. The party of the future might well bear the name Commonwealth, people's reform, home protection party—any one of these names would, I believe, hasten forward the triumph of our cause. Meanwhile, we give our influence to whatever party gives its influence to prohibition, and nationally there is but one. God bless the prohibition party of these United States!

Hand in hand, eye to eye, heart to heart, and on our knees, we women of the North and South, East and West, solemnly swear eternal enmity to alcohol; we are for prohibition by law, prohibition by politics, prohibition by woman's ballot, so help us Almighty God.

But this result will work out slowly. There is always the Pharisee mind, the Sadducee mind, the Nathaniel who comes by night, lacking the courage of his convictions, although in him there is no guile, only he is still an Israelite and wedded to the old-time views. And there is always an apostle of the Gentiles striking out new paths, blazing the trees, and taking as his portion the cause, the curses, and the consequences. This is just as true in religious things as it is in things political. Politics and religion divide the world, and are the two great realms.

* * * * *

Thank God, there is not one among all the thousands of beautiful banners that belt this world today, bearing the mottoes of the W. C. T. U., that does not mean

"Lift high His holy banner—
It must not suffer loss."

But every triumph of the liquor traffic at the polls trails that banner in the dust, helps to empty church altars and crowd the bar and grog shop. Christian men know this as well as any saloon-keeper could tell them. Therefore, the Woman's Christian Temperance Union cries aloud and spares not, nor will it spare, nor will it cease to cry to the voting manhood of the nation that has named the name of Christ:

"Onward, Christian soldiers, marching as to war,
With the cross of Jesus going on before!"

New York Fashions.

OPERA DRESSES.

The handsomest evening and dinner dresses are combinations of Bengaline or velvet with brocade and mousseline de soir. Princess outlines lead in making, and for low neck, the round cut is in most favor, though occasionally a square bodice is seen. Often the neck is low with long or elbow sleeves and in the way of sleeves, almost anything and everything, beginning at nothing (no sleeve) is admissible. Some new sleeves are merely plain pieces of fabric apparently fastened on the outside by large buttons and finished with lace extending to the elbow and an equally new sleeve is cut long and the upper portion then drawn up to the shoulders, leaving the lower part long. A round puff half way to the elbow is popular and while shoulders are sometimes very high, yet again the rise is but moderate.

HIGH NECK DRESSES

may be really high or with V or square cut filled in with lace or mousseline and whether high or low, corsages are elaborately trimmed or show material puffed or folded. A charming dress worn by a young member of the Astor family at the Opera, was of pink mousseline made high neck and long sleeves, the waist full and round and the sleeves a succession of puffs. An equally pretty dress worn by Julia Morosini was of white mousseline outlined by pink passementerie, the neck square low and with elbow sleeves. Quite dark tan gloves are sometimes worn with these light evening dresses, but the greater number wear pale tan, white or pearl color.

INEXPENSIVE

evening dresses easily made at home are of crepon, a thin wool coming in evening colors and resembling China crape. Double width it costs 75 cents a yard and is appropriately trimmed with ribbon. Of somewhat higher grade are dresses of China silk, either plain or figured and for these also, ribbon is a pretty finish and the plain and figured fabrics are often combined with dressy result. Sheer crapes embroidered are extremely pretty or gauzes in dots or stripes which are a prelude to dress patterns in embroidered mousseline commencing at $7 the pattern. The transparent materials just mentioned are made up over silk of the same shade and have usually round skirts with full bodices outlined by passementerie. Crepons or silks are often made with short basques and skirts a little draped.

NOTES AND ANSWERS.

Feather trimming is extremely popular for evening dresses and comes in all suitable colors.

"Lucy A." Brooches in simulation of orchids or chrysanthemums are the most fashionable styles. Pendants of one or more large stones are also much worn and may be likewise utilized for brooches.

"Mrs. R." A fancy pin would be appropriate present. Small flowers are fashionable for these and prices run from about $4 upwards. Silver pins in flower designs begin at $2. LUCY CARTER.

The structure weighs 68,000,000 pounds, and the dome alone would tip the scales at 850,000 pounds. From the foundation to the top of the flagstaff is 375½ feet. Above the Frankfort-street sidewalk there are in the main structure fourteen full stories and two mazzanine stories; below the sidewalk is the press-room and one mazzanine story; in the dome are six full stories and one mazzanine story; above the dome is the lantern floor; total number of floors, twenty-six. There are 142,864 square feet of floor space in the building. About 5,000,000 pounds of iron and steel, and 5,875,000 bricks were required.

The Postal Service.

People generally take more interest in the workings of the postoffice department than in the affairs of any other branch of the national government, probably because the postoffice and the people are so intimately connected. For that reason the suggestions in Postmaster-General Wanamaker's report are attracting general attention. Every one will admit that the report is one that is unusually suggestive. The postmaster-general's most important recommendation is that a postal telegraph system shall be established by the government. In that matter he will receive the hearty support of the majority of the people of the country. Every one who has suffered from the evils of the present monopoly, and who realizes how much cheaper and more effective the telegraph service might be made under government control, will agree with Mr. Wanamaker that a postal telegraph system would greatly benefit the country. The postoffice and the telegraph are so intimately and naturally connected that they ought not to be kept separate any longer. The telegraph is only a quicker means of communication than the postoffice, and there is no more reason why it should be controlled by private citizens in their own interests than why the business of carrying the letters of the country should be entrusted to a great monopoly. The excellence of the present postal service and its low cost form a basis for strong argument in favor of putting the telegraph lines of the country under government control. Most people probably would not accept the ultra doctrines of the Nationalists, but the time will come, we believe, when by general agreement the railroads and the telegraph lines of the country will be controlled by the government as the postoffice is now.

Mr. Wanamaker also recommends that postal savings banks be established, that pneumatic service be introduced in large cities, that the free delivery system be extended to small towns, that the government departments be required to pay postage on the matter they send through the mails, that the rate of postage on sample copies of so-called newspapers and books printed in "libraries" be increased, and that a one-cent rate for letters be adopted. Nearly all of these suggestions show a great deal of practical common sense. Altogether the postmaster-general's report is a business-like document, and it is to be hoped that Congress will give to his suggestions due consideration.—Somerville Journal.

There's a great difference in lamp-chimneys—depends on the glass. One pops whenever anything happens, sometimes when nothing happens. Another almost never breaks.

Lamp-chimneys are like segars—they cost so little apiece and so much by the year!—the breaking kind. The other sort is like the measles—once is enough.

Can you tell them apart? The unbreakable chimney has a "pearl-top." The makers, Macbeth & Co. Pittsburgh.

Poetry.

Looking at Both Sides.

The good wife bustled about the house,
Her face still bright with a pleasant smile,
As broken snatches of happy song
Strengthened her heart and her hands the while:
The good man sat in the chimney nook,
His little clay pipe within his lips,
And all he'd made and all he had lost,
Ready and clear on his finger tips.

"Good wife, I've just been thinking a bit;
Nothing has done very good this year.
Money is bound to be hard to get,
Everything is sure to be very dear.
How the cattle are going to feed,
How we're to keep the boys at school,
Is a kind of debit and credit sum
I can't make balance by any rule."

She turned her around from the baking bread,
And she faced him there with a cheerful laugh;
"Why, husband dear, one would really think
That the good rich wheat was only chaff.
And what if wheat is only chaff
So long as we both are well and strong?
I'm not a woman to worry a bit—
But—somehow or other we get along."

"For thirty years we have loved each other,
Stood by each other whatever befell;
Six boys have called us 'father and mother,'
And all of them living and doing well
We owe no man a penny, my dear;
And both of us loving and well and strong,
Good man I wish you would smoke again,
And think how well we have got along."

He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh,
He kissed his wife with a tender pride;
He said, "I'll do as you tell me, love;
I'll just count up on the other side."
She left him then with his better thought,
And lifted her work with a low, sweet song,
A song that's followed me many a year—
"Somehow or other we get along!"

Miscellany.

THE COUNTRY COUSIN.

"Wal, good-by, [illegible], Edwiny! Try and not get lonesome, an' mebby me or Uncle Pete will give you a call 'fore long—som'rs about New Year."

Good-natured Abner Overcup was escorting his pretty cousin, Edwina Alden, to the station, where she was to take the Iron Mountain accommodation train for St. Louis.

"Oh, do, Abner!" cried Edwina, brightly, as her cousin lifted her out of the wagon, and tied Bally and Dobbin, the two sleek chestnuts, to the hitching-post under a big elm tree. "Do come New Year's day, if you can, Cousin Abner. I've heard Eva and Ermengarde tell what a nice time they have then receiving calls. They have a table of refreshments, with ham and chicken-salad and coffee, and all sort of confectionery, iced pound cake, you know, and chocolate cream, and—oh, everything nice! Come then, won't you, Cousin Abner?"

Cousin Abner smiled indulgently, showing a row of not very ornamental teeth, a wide expanse of mouth, and butternut-hued moustache.

"I'll try, Edwiny," he promised obligingly. "If Uncle Pete don't git his head sot on coming hisself. If he does, of course I kaint, you know."

And after helping his cousin find a seat in the car, and depositing her satchel, basket, etc., at her side, Abner Overcup wended his way to the village store to get a supply of coffee and sugar in exchange for the box of fresh-laid egg the had brought down.

Edwina, meanwhile, sped rapidly along on her way to St. Louis, whither she was going on a visit to her cousins, Eva and Ermengarde, who, finding it convenient to spend their summers at the old farm-house, had invited her, with a show of cordiality, to pass the winter with them in the city.

"Of course she'll never come, though," they assured themselves, cheerfully.

And now here she was, and what to do with her was the question. For Edwina was quite too pretty with her yellow tresses and Hebe liked complexion to be introduced among the eligibles of their set.

The Misses Eva and Ermengarde would cheerfully have hidden her under a bushel if they could.

"I met a friend of yours in the car," announced Edwina, dimpling and blushing in a very aggravating manner. "That Mr. Jermyn who came to visit you once at our house, last summer."

"Royal Jermyn! How unfortunate!"

The sisters exchanged glances of dismay.

"What did he have to say, dear?" asked Eva, sweetly.

"Oh, nothing much! He showed me my way here, and carried my satchel for me. And he—he said he would call to-night."

And Edwina blushed pinker than ever as she thought of the look which had accompanied the words.

Royal Jermyn did come that night, and admired the little Hebe, as he called her, more than ever.

But after that, although he called quite frequently, he never had the luck to find Edwina in.

The sisters were so sorry! but really their cousin was a sad little gad-about, and of course they did not pretend to control her actions.

And thereupon they redoubled their own fascinations to make the visitor forget, if possible, all thoughts of the little rustic, as they dubbed her between themselves.

For Royal Jermyn was an "eligible of the eligibles," and the Misses Eva and Ermengarde Alden had resolved that he should succumb to one or the other of them before the winter's campaign was over.

* * * * * * * * *

New Year's day, and the streets and pavements were covered with a carpet of snowy white, its fleecy pile softer than the choicest velvet of Turkey's looms.

Eva and Ermengarde were resplendent in new cashmere dresses, their pale tresses carefully banged and frizzed, and their faces pearl-powdered and vinegar-rouged, till their natural complexions would never have recognized themselves in the gas-lighted mirrors, from which they were reflected.

The refreshment tables looked very tempting with their array of crystal and silver, fruit and confectionery, while an appetising odor of French coffee and chicken-salad diffused itself through the room.

"I do hope Edwina won't venture to show herself," remarked Eva, anxiously, as she shook out her train and took a last glance at herself in the dressing-room mirror.

"No danger," laughed Ermengarde. "I settled that matter. Our little rustic is sitting in state in the sewing-room, waiting for a summons to make her debut in the parlor. She'll wait a long time, though, before any visitor calls for her!"

"But that gawky, overgrown Abner, you know," persisted Eva. "Edwina expects him to call today.

"Abner, indeed! I'll soon settle that. I came near forgetting it, though."

And calling Susan, the girl who attended the door-bell, Ermengarde showed her a photograph recently purloined, for the purpose, from Edwina's little velvet-bound album.

"Susan, would you know that man if he should call today?"

Susan took a good look at the photograph.

"Sure, an' I would, mem!" she responded. "I'd know the big yaller moustache an' wide-open black eyes in the ould counthry, mem."

"Very well, Susan. Now, if he calls today, I want you to show him into the little sewing-room where my cousin is sitting. She will receive him. And, Susan, don't, on any account, bring him to us!"

"Very well, mem!"

And Susan retired, to answer the first peal of the door-bell.

All day the callers came and went, while poor Edwina, in her peach-colored merino, sat alone in the little sewing-room, waiting vainly for a summons to the parlor.

Susan had brought her refreshments at luncheon time; but refreshment was not what she wanted.

At last, just when the gas in the street lamps was being lighted, a gentleman called who attracted Susan's special attention.

"Sure it's himself," she muttered, taking a furtive look at the photograph, which Ermengarde had given her for the purpose. "It's the gintleman wid the big, yaller moustache and wide-open, black eyes.

And, without more ado, Susan conveyed the caller to the little sewing-room, where Edwina sat alone and disconsolate.

"It may be etiquette," she was saying to herself. "But it ain't a bit nice, and I know I wouldn't leave my cousins alone all day, etiquette or no etiquette. I"—

"A gintleman to see yez, Miss Edwiny!" announced Susan.

And, with dancing eyes and dimpling cheeks, Edwina received her visitor.

"I've come to say good-by, Eva and Ermengarde," announced Edwina the next morning, as her cousins lounged over their late breakfast, looking fatigued and worn after their yesterday's exertions. "I'm going home."

"Dear me! why must you go in such a hurry?" asked Eva, sipping her chocolate, and inwardly rejoicing at her cousin's determination.

"I—I'm going to be married in the spring," exclaimed Edwina, blushing like a peony, "and I must get my sewing done, you know."

"Married? And so Cousin Abner proposed yesterday, hey?" cried both sisters in a breath.

Edwina looked surprised.

"Abner?—yesterday?" she repeated. "I haven't seen Cousin Abner since the day I left home. And, besides, he is already engaged to Patty Haws."

The sisters looked mystified.

"Abner not here? Who—who was your caller, then!" cried Ermengarde, exchanging looks of dismay with her sister.

Edwina smiled demurely. She guessed something of the mistake now.

"It was Mr. Jermyn," she answered. "And he is waiting in the parlor now to take me to the depot. We are going to be married in May, and you must both come to see the wedding."

And kissing her cousins good-by, she tripped away to join the tall lover who was impatiently awaiting her reappearance.

Susan was soundly berated for her stupid mistake, but the mischief was already done, and no amount of berating would undo it.

New Year Words to Girls.

You are sitting quite quietly watching the old year as it fades away and the new one as it comes in. You think of all the joys and the sorrows that have come to you during 1890, and of your hopes and ambitions for 1891; you believe just as you did a year ago—that you will make a great resolve that the year shall be better and your life nobler and more unselfish than it was last year. Now don't do this. Don't make the big resolve. Think, hope and pray what you want to, but in its place, make a lot of little resolves that each one of which will in time tend to make you reach the goal you desire to.

Resolve to think a little less about yourself and a little more of the comforts of others.

Resolve to be less quick of speech and more certain in action than you have been.

Resolve not to let the wicked little demon of envy enter your heart and make you bitter and fault-finding.

Resolve to consider those of your own household; the inclination on the part of too many of us is to reserve our virtues and our graces for those outside, and this is all wrong.

My dear girls, you had better blush unseen, as good daughters and good sisters, than gain all the fame imaginable as bright talkers and great beauties without any homely talent. I like that word homely—I use it perhaps in a different sense from the one you give it. It means belonging to the home, and as the home is the place where love and charity should abide, so the talents that belong to it are best worth possessing. God bless every one of you and give you some day a home of your own. It may come in the new year. It may be in the years that are far off, but if it never comes just remember that the talent of making a home may be yours, and even though you can only exercise it in a single room you must not bury it and count it of no value. —Ruth Ashmore, in The Ladies' Home Journal.

Mark ye the model citizen. There are no holes in his sidewalks, nor loose planks. His chickens scratch not the garden of his neighbors, and he supplyeth his home with an abundance of the economical Brussels soap. The end of that man is peace.

This May Mean You.

We wish to repeat for the hundredth time that this paper does not insert in its columns free of expense, announcements of meetings of any kind whether church, society or otherwise where an admission fee is charged. They are all business enterprises and must seek admission to newspaper attention on a business basis. A newspaper is usually the recipient of hundreds of such during each year and if it responded then it would be an active branch of the Associated Charities. A little reflection will open the minds of seekers after that kind of free advertising, to the fact that a newspaper is but a private business affair and that there is no more special reason why it should give away its advertising than its subscriptions. Those who go to the press with their advertisements invariably get more out of it in the end than those who ask something for nothing. The paper which gives away its advertising and its publications usually has very little to give which is of the slightest value to anybody. This notice ought to be pasted in a good many hats and bonnets in this vicinity, that any affair for which an admission fee is taken must be paid for if advertised in this paper. If it is a free entertainment that is another thing. It can also be said that no newspaper cares to swap advertising for tickets. The latter are too common a thing to have any trade value.—Bridgewater Independent.

Magazine Notes.

The Ladies' Home Journal is full of good things this month. Among the stories is part three of the romance "Pasquale" part two of "Mrs. Parkin's Christmas Eve" and "A Golden Gossip." Then there are short selections on Home Dressmaking, What to Wear, The Fashion World, Housekeeping, All About Flowers, King's Daughters, Why Have Women no Time, Under my Study Lamp, Wives of Noted Men, Fancy Work and a most interesting department for children. Published monthly at Philadelphia.

The Household, which has been published for so many years at Brattleboro, Vermont, has moved to Boston, bag and baggage and the January number is the first to be issued from the new office, 50 Bromfield street. It is the intention of the publishers to make this popular monthly paper, more than ever a companion and help to the housewife and in fact to the whole family as its departments are various and interesting.

"TOILETTES." This new fashion magazine is captivating the ladies by thousands; the great number of lovely costumes it illustrates each month is too strong a temptation to be resisted; the styles are new and original, being made from sketches taken in New York, London, Paris and Berlin, the publication being devoted exclusively to fashions for women and children: it is, without exception, the best authority upon the subject we have ever seen. The price for one year's subscription is only $1.50; single copies, 15 cents. For sale by all booksellers and newsdealers, who also receive subscriptions at publishers' price. TOILETTES PUBLISHING CO., 184 Cherry street, New York, are the publishers.

In Harper's Magazine for January, Charles Dudley Warner, in a paper of great practical value, describes "The Outlook in Southern California," and the very popular series of articles on South America is resumed by Mr. Child, "Impressions of Peru." The chief place in fiction is given to the opening chapters of Charles Egbert Craddock's new novel, "In the 'Stranger People's' Country," which is illustrated by W. T. Smedley. "At the 'Casa Napoleon'" is a story of life in the Spanish quarter of New York city, written by Thomas A. Janvier. "A Modern Legend" is a beautiful short story by Vida D. Scudder. "Saint Anthony—a Christmas Eve Ballad," by Mrs. E. W. Latimer, is accompanied by three striking illustrations from drawings by C. S. Reinhart. Other poems are contributed by Richard E. Burton, Julian Hawthorne, Charles H. Crandall, Nannie Mayo Fitzhugh, and Archibald Lampman.

What Makes a Man Old.

To himself, a man is as old as he feels; to others, as old as he looks. There is nothing strikingly new in this observation, but it applied well in an amusing case the other day. On a train that was coming in to Boston, there were two gentlemen, sitting in contiguous seats. One of them was gray and bent. As the train approached the station the white-haired man rose, took up his overcoat, hesitated and glanced nervously around. Then he said:

"Young man, I will be much obliged if you will help me on with my overcoat."

The other rose quickly, and gave him the assistance that was asked for.

"There—now! I'm a little stiff. Thank you," said the old man. "You are kind. Some time you may be old yourself, and thet you will be glad of a young man's assistance."

The other laughed. "Perhaps, sir," he said, "you wouldn't object telling me how old you are?"

"I? Oh, no," said the old man. "I am sixty-three years old—almost sixty-four," he said with a sigh.

"Indeed!" said the "young man" and now I'll tell you how old I am. I shall be seventy-one years old my next birthday."

It was his actual age, but the first man flatly refused to believe it, and went off with an air as if he thought the other were trying to play a rather bad joke.—Boston Transcript.

No Screens in the House.

I haven't had a screen in my house for fifteen years. Housewifely patients who call upon me summers express great surprise when they see every window in my house open, and exclaim, "Why, you must be just overrun with flies."

"Well," I say, "look around and see if you can find them."

The fact is that my servant has less paint and picture frames to clean because of flies than any housemaid I know of. Sun and light make cleanliness, and as the fly is a natural scavenger he soon finds that he has no business in a clean room, and he leaves it. There are very few flies in our house, but there would be more if I had screens to keep them in, for they will get in, screens or no screens.—Cor. Boston Globe.

On Land and Sea.

The fashions of washing are many. Some nations pound the clothing; some dip them into boiling springs; woodsmen hang theirs in running brooks, while sailors tow their clothing behind sailing ships, after covering it with salt water soap. None of these methods are really effective A cleanly and easy wash can best be had with Brussels soap, which is a foe to dirt.

MAYOR FAIRBANKS.

The third year of a city government was inaugurated on Monday. Like the two preceding ones, the day was stormy and very unfavorable to a large attendance of citizens.

Among those present were City Treasurer Adams, City Auditor Hall, Principal Assessor Curtis, Assistant Assessors Waterhouse and Pope, Overseer Field, Commissioner Alexander, Park Commissioners Glover and Merrill, Superintendent of Schools Aldrich, ex-Councilmen Whitman, Stearns, Kapples, Glover, Ewell, Green and Wilde.

Promptly at 12 M. Mayor-elect Fairbanks entered on the arm of Mayor Porter, and they were accompanied by City Clerk Spear and City Messenger Tirrell.

Rev. D. M. Wilson of the First church invoked the divine blessing.

The oath was then administered to Mayor Fairbanks by City Clerk Spear, and he answered clearly and distinctly "I do."

The new Mayor then read his inaugural address, which is printed below. The delivery occupied about twenty-five minutes, and the suggestions and recommendations met with general approval.

MAYOR FAIRBANKS' ADDRESS.

In accordance with the provisions of our charter, and in pursuance to the call of the citizens, we have assembled here today to take upon ourselves a solemn obligation to perform such duties as will devolve upon us with care and fidelity, with zeal and an earnest purpose, being actuated by one motive, endeavoring to accomplish but one result—the welfare and prosperity of our city.

As we today officially assume the duties, we should endeavor to take a comprehensive view of the work that lies before us, and it becomes my duty to invite your attention in as brief a manner as possible to the municipal affairs of our city and then go forward with you to meet its duties and responsibilities.

The prosperity of the affairs of any well ordered municipal government depends upon the management of its resources, and how to give the city a high quality of service in all its departments with a moderate tax rate is by all odds the problem that comes home directly to the citizens.

It will become my duty to carefully consider the urgent needs and demands of the various departments for the ensuing year, to thoroughly estimate the running expenses and cost of ordinary improvements, and place before you at an early date an official communication on the subject. I believe that the current expenses of our city should be paid entirely out of its revenue for the year; when, however, an improvement is designed to be of a lasting benefit, the burden should be in part borne in the years to be benefitted, but such improvements should only be made after careful and mature deliberation and a firm belief in the future benefits to be enjoyed.

Expenditure of the public monies for current expenses and improvements, are controlled by the law limiting municipal indebtedness, and fixing the rate of taxation. The appropriations for city purposes cannot exceed in any year, $12 on one thousand of the average valuation of property for the three preceding years, which appears from the assessors' books to be as follows:

Valuation, 1888,	$9,757,960
Valuation, 1889,	12,319,245
Valuation, 1890,	13,683,000
Total,	$35,760,205

Which makes the average valuation to be $11,853,400.

Upon this amount less abatements and with receipts from various sources, must be raised the income for the year, to which is added the state and county tax, and the sums required for that portion of the city indebtedness falling due.

The borrowing capacity of the city is limited by law to 2½ per cent. of the above average valuation, which would be about $296,000.

The debt of the city January 1st, 1891, is as follows:

CITY DEBT, JANUARY 1, 1891.

	Totals.	Falling due this year.
Neponset bridge,	$18,000.00	$2,000.00

Repair fund Mt. Wollaston cemetery,	4,775.00
Rock Island fund,	727.50
	$191,476.89	$33,685.39

A total of $191,477.89, of which amount $33,685.39 is due the present year. $179,318.16 is of the nature of permanent improvements.

A careful study of the financial situation, leads me to believe that, provided there is no increase in the valuation for the present year, the tax rate will be $15½ per thousand.

SCHOOLS.

There is no department of the city's interest that has entrusted to it by our charter more of responsibility and care, than is invested in the school committee. They have the management of the education of our children, giving them a sound common school instruction, thereby preparing them to be useful, intelligent citizens, a credit to themselves, and to our city, which has ever taken a just pride in promoting this department. The detailed report of this committee will soon be laid before the Council, giving you the account of their stewardship, and which will aid you in determining the necessary appropriation to continue the work for the present year. I am informed that the number of pupils at the present time is 3405.

Increase of pupils over last year, 118.

It is to be deeply regretted that the work on the Willard School House has progressed so slowly, and that still further delays may follow from the financial embarrassment of the contractors. To my mind important questions have arisen, and steps are being taken to thoroughly acquaint myself with the true state of affairs—and I shall communicate to the Council, I hope at an early date, what steps are necessary to hasten the completion of this much needed building.

The city has at the present time invested in school buildings nearly $200,000, and in consideration of our present debt, and the calls for needed improvements, requiring large expenditures to place our city in a more satisfactory condition, I would ask you to carefully consider, if it would not be a wise policy to partially insure them, to guard against a heavy loss in the future, from destruction by fire.

STREETS.

The operation of the street department are performed under the public eye, and are therefore open to much criticism, often unfair, by those who do not realize the many needs of our city in this direction, and the small amount of money available to keep in passable order, over eighty miles of accepted streets. I believe it should be the aim that what is worthy to be done, that it be well done, and that particular attention should be given, that the full value of the money expended be done in a careful, judicious manner, avoiding all unnecessary expenses. It would seem as if more attention should be given to paving the gutters of many of our streets, that the surface water be given a road-way, thus preventing an annual expenditure upon the same streets caused by the regular washing away of the surface after a heavy rain.

Complaint, often well founded, in more than one instance, that the streets are left in a dangerous condition by the corporations who have been granted franchises by the city, and it is a waste of the public monies to thoroughly repair a street to be soon uprooted for the purpose of laying mains of whatever nature, and more attention should be given to this question, and I would recommend that the ordinance concerning streets be amended, by inserting a section, prohibiting the opening of the public streets for the purpose of laying pipes or mains from December 1st to April 1st, except in cases of obvious necessity, and that when the city is about to re-build or re-surface a street, due notice be sent to the corporations having the right to lay pipes or mains, informing them of the city's work, the street shall not be again opened for the space of six months.

In view of the probable construction of a sewer through many of the streets in the near future, it would seem unwise to order any large outlays, unless the work could be done in harmony with the other department, though a careful foresight will be given to remedy the defects which are dangerous to public travel. The demand for opening new streets, is of course in advance of the city's ability to comply, and I would ask the council to carefully consider the merits of all petitions, in view of the work needed in streets already accepted by the city, and which deserve attention.

The councils of the previous years have deemed it best for the future welfare of our city to first thoroughly rebuild the main thoroughfares, and it would be my judgment that the present year should see Water street widened, to 40 feet from Franklin street to Granite street. It is one of the main thoroughfares of the city, and the business travel will be ever on the increase, and public necessity requires that you give this question your immediate attention. Surveys of the above street are in the possession of the city, showing the plan and details. If the work is ordered, it is hoped that the sewer pipes can be laid at the same time. Washington street from the bridge to South street, should be thoroughly rebuilt or repaired the coming year; the city cannot afford to rebuild the entire length of this street the present year, if you in your judgment decide to widen Water street, which is the most important, and which will cause a large expenditure of money.

The citizens have a right to expect more attention to be given to rebuilding sidewalks in various parts of this city, and which by constant travel are now in a dangerous condition, and unfit for use in rainy weather, they have also the right to expect that more street crossings be placed, that they can pass from one sidewalk to another without so much discomfort in various ways, and I hope to make needed improvements in this direction.

I would repeat the recommendations made to the council of last year by His Honor, Mayor Porter, in reference to Randolph avenue. This street is one rarely used by the citizens of Quincy, and I trust the council will give careful consideration to the proposition of deeding a tract of 1000 acres, which includes Randolph avenue and Forest street to the town of Milton.

The report of the Commissioner of Public Works which will be presented to the council, will give you valuable information as to the work performed during the past year.

LIGHTING.

The council of 1890, deemed it wise to establish a system of incandescent lighting in various wards of the city believing the same would be more satisfactory, and the result of the change will be watched with interest, for the city should take the very best method of furnishing protection to public travel over our highways. We have at present, 88 arc lights, 91 incandescent lights, 68 gas lights, 147 oil lamps.

I believe this city will be better lighted by the new arrangements entered into with the Gas Co., to assume the care and repairs of the gas lights.

The proper method to be employed in lighting our streets, is a question that we must carefully consider in the near future. Under the new contracts, the expense will be the coming year over $13,000. Many petitions will be received for additional lights, but they cannot be granted. Light has become a necessity, and there is no true business reason why a city should not have the right of furnishing light as a protection to travel over its highways, as an aid to the police service, also to supply its surplus to private citizens. A city should have the right to benefit its taxpayers by saving their monies. I am aware of the many obstacles apparently in the way, but I think the Council can render the city important service by studying this problem and becoming acquainted with the steps now being taken by other cities and towns, to accomplish this object of properly lighting of the city.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

One of the necessary adjuncts to a well regulated municipal government, is a well organized fire department, and by being so it assures protection to life and property from the ravages of fire, increases the confidence of the citizens, and indirectly enhances the value of real estate.

The rapid growth of our city the past few years, makes the demand more imperative that it should be well equipped, and con-

Opera Priscilla.

One of the very best entertainments ever given in this city, was the grand production at Faxon hall, the past week of Coolidge & Surette's comic opera "Priscilla, or the Pilgrim's proxy." The cast was largely local, but there were the following professionals:

Mrs. Alice May Bates Rice, as Priscilla.
Miss Augusta Bates, as Resignation.
Mr. J. C. Bartlett, as John Alden.
Mr. W. H. Dodd, in the Comic Role of Hatebad Higgins.

Mr. C. E. Macomber of Boston was director, Mr. W. H. Dodd stage manager and Prof. F. Wrigley of this city pianist.

The story of the "Courtship of Myles Standish" by Longfellow is too well known to be rehearsed at this time. The opera was first brought out in Concord, the place of residence of the author and the composer, and it carried the town by storm. It is burlesque without a shadow of coarseness, and the mosaic of fun and sentiment is so deftly put together that a very harmonious picture is the result. The historical personages who figure in the opera are the doughty Myles Standish, the bashful and obliging John Alden, the dignified William Bradford, Governor of the colony, and the roguishly demure Priscilla. Squanto, the Indian friend of the colonists, and Barbara, whom Standish eventually married, also appear.

If any part more than another pleased us it was Mr. W. H. Dodd as Hatebad Higgins; his makeup, acting and singing were all excellent, and one selection was encored five or six times.

Mrs. Bates-Rice as Priscilla acted her part well and captivated the audience with her singing.

Mr. Bartlett as John Alden and Dr. Rice as Myles Standish were seemingly perfect, and their costumes were very appropriate. Their musical numbers received encores.

Miss Bates as Resignation was a true spinster, and was particularly good in the scene where Hatebad was wooing her.

Mr. Preston as Governor Bradford was excellent, and his solos were much admired.

Mrs. Packard as Barbara, Miss Pettengill as Prudence, and Miss Hastings as Faith, carried their parts finely.

Mr. Simmons made a good Squanto.

The chorus was composed of about thirty-five young ladies and gentlemen of the city, and had evidently been well trained. It was strong and clear and added much to the effect. The chorus:

Jennie T. Fellows.
Mary S. Fellows.
Lizzie Gould.
Fannie Hitchcock.
Mary F. Simmons.
Florence G. Olney.
Lora MacKay.
Mabel MacKay.
Etta Key.
Mabel Oxford.
Edith Gray.
Lizzie Shepherd.
Lulu Jones.
Carrie Baker.
Carrie M. Shunk.
Ida H. Goodspeed.
Walter Hersey.
Henry French.
Fred Jones.
William Osborne.
William Isaac.
Frank Gilbert.
Walter Burke.
William Manning.
Edward Manning.
John Fenton.
Justine F. Emery.
Lewis C. Baker.
George C. Ela.

Our criticisms are all favorable it will be noticed, but they could not honestly be otherwise.

The attendance at the comic opera of Priscilla at Faxon hall, Thursday evening, was not quite as large as the first night, but it represented more money as all the seats were reserved at $1.

The audience perhaps was more appreciative and inspired the actors to greater efforts, making the production even better than the evening previous.

Much of the success is due to Mrs. Wrigley, who superintends the dress of the ladies.

The ushers are Messrs. Charles W. Hall and F. C. Brown.

The Ledger Contest.

The popularity contest inaugurated Jan. 1 by the Quincy DAILY LEDGER is the all absorbing subject of the week. It has received a wonderful impetus and there is a new leader almost daily. Miss Mary Leary of East Milton, employed at S. B. Little's, West Quincy, was in the lead by Friday morning's summary, but has several close rivals. The standing of those having over 100 at 8 A. M. Friday was:

Name	Employed at	Vote
Miss Leary,	S. B. Little's	1047
Henry W. Tirrell,	John Page's	972
Miss McGovern,	Gas Light Co.	727
Robert E. Foy,	Pratt & Curtis	724
Galen V. Bowditch,	E. Packard & Co.'s	451
George F. Field,	Weeks & Potter's	355
Miss McPhail,	J. F. Sheppard & Sons	246
Fred Goss,	John W. Nash's	203
Frank W. Munroe,	J. F. Merrill's	115

The Watch.

Two valuable watches have been selected for the prize in the popularity contest from the large stock of T. L. Williams. One a lady's watch to be given if the winner is a lady, and the other a gentleman's watch to be given in case a gentleman leads. Both are valued at over $50 and are now on exhibition at Mr. Williams. Here is a brief description of them:

Lady's watch is solid 14k case, Waltham movement, full jeweled, adjusted to heat and cold, stem winder, pendant set and has patent regulator.

The Gentleman's watch is solid 14k case, Waltham movement, full jeweled, adjusted, stem-winder, pendant set, patent regulator, the very latest thing out.

A Fine Supplement.

It was twenty-five years last week since the Athol Chronicle was started, one of the best papers in Worcester county, and to celebrate the event Brother Waterman and son issued a handsome illustrated supplement, giving many of the public buildings, blocks and residences in Athol. It was very finely printed and creditable to the publishers. There is no doubt but Brother Waterman has done more through the influence of his excellent paper, to make Athol the live, active town it is, than any other individual or firm in the place.

GREAT IMPROVEMENT. The old and familiar sheet, the Pawtucket Gazette and Chronicle was hardly recognized last week, in its new and handsome dress, and eight-page form. Its aged readers will feel for a while as though they had lost a dear, old friend, as its familiar face is gone; but in time will appreciate its handsome appearance and convenient forms. Bro. Lee has always given his readers an excellent newspaper, and in its new form will endeavor to do even better than in the past. May he receive the success which his energy and force deserve.

THE INDIAN TROUBLE. In his sermon last Sunday on the New Year Rev. W. S. Key spoke very plainly and earnestly on the Indian troubles in the North-west. Mr. Key has travelled extensively in that territory as a newspaper correspondent for a London journal; is well acquainted with several of the Catholic missionaries, and holds the opinion strongly that the trouble has been precipitated by the unfair and unjust treatment of Government agents. Mr. Key urged every citizen, through their representative, to demand a full enquiry.

It is an open secret that ex-Councilman W. W. Ewell will be the next Commissioner of Public Works, and we commend Mayor Fairbank's selection. It is an important office, perhaps more so than that of Mayor, and a successful business man, and a Quincy man too, is needed. The little child of John Leary who has been sick is improving.

The Old Colony have done a wise thing in removing the flag boys at the crossings and substituting men.

School Committee Organize.

The School Committee of 1891 met Tuesday evening, the entire board, Messrs. R. F. Claflin, Rev. H. E. Cotton, Wendell G. Corthell, Emery L. Crane, Dr. John A. Gordon, Elijah G. Hall, Harrison A. Keith, Rev. Ambrose F. Roche and Dr. Joseph M. Sheahan, being present.

Dr. John A. Gordon was elected temporary chairman, and Emery L. Crane, temporary secretary.

R. F. Claflin was then elected permanent chairman, and superintendent of schools, George I. Aldrich, permanent secretary of the board, the latter however after some objection.

The Board voted to employ George I. Aldrich, as Superintendent of schools for the ensuing year at a salary of $2000.

A motion that Supt. Aldrich give his whole time to the city was indefinitely postponed.

The chairman then appointed the following sub-committees:

Forresters' Ball.

The tenth annual concert and ball of St. Francis Court, No. 25, M. C. O. F., held Wednesday evening, at the Coliseum, was a complete success and was attended by a large party who danced the merry hours away to the music of Vose's Band of Medway. From 8 to 9 o'clock the orchestra gave the following selections:

1. Overture, "Castle Gate,"	Schlepegrell
2. Gavotte, "Etta,"	Roermeester
3. Selection, "Fair Dove,"	Schlepegrell
4. Waltz, "Madeline,"	Waldtenfel
5. Galop, "Entre Nous,"	Rowell

Then came the grand march which was led by John Vogel, Chief Ranger, and wife, followed by some eighty couples, many of the ladies' costumes being very handsome, but want of space forbids description.

The committee of arrangements were: John Vogel chairman, Adam S. Vogel, Jas. A. White, S. A. Pierce, R. J. Larkin, D. H. Fitzgerald, P. W. Mannex, D. F. Geary, and C. C. Hearn.

During a short intermission in the festivities, Caterer Nash served a supper in the upper hall.

Among those noticed in the hall was Representative Burke, Councilman Powers, ex-Councilman Shea and others.

WOLLASTON.

But one new pupil has entered the Wollaston school this term,—Lola A. West.

Wollaston Lodge, one of the most prosperous fraternal organizations in this State, installed its officers Monday evening. District Deputy F. M. Hersey and suite of Hingham performed the ceremony. Mayor Fairbanks is the senior past dictator of this lodge, and the mayor and lodge were both proud of the fact that his attendance and subsequent speech at the banquet were the first social events to follow his inauguration.

After the installation of the officers, the lodge was closed and all the members and invited guests repaired to the hall in Mr. F. J. Perry's new building, where that veteran committee Messrs. Brasee, Baker and Bates had already prepared one of their customary feasts.

After a blessing by Rev. W. S. Key, chaplain of the lodge, Dictator W. B. Orcutt invited those present to discuss the viands before them. Half an hour had been profitably spent in the knife and fork exercise when Dictator Orcutt called a halt, and suddenly the jokes, laughter and small talk participated in by the members was hushed and gave their attention to speeches of the evening.

Mr. Herbert W. Marshall, secretary and treasurer of the Wollaston Congregational Sunday school, made his fourteenth annual report before that school Sunday. The report shows that there are at present 160 scholars, 16 teachers, and 4 officers enrolled and the average attendance for the year has been 110. The smallest number present on any one Sunday was 57,—Aug. 21—and the largest number 145,—Dec. 21.

The receipts the past year have been $181.25 and the expenditures $139.57, leaving a balance of $41.68.

The receipts of the Library fund for the year were $53.25, and the expenditures $35.66 leaving a balance of $17.59. The total amount of money in the hands of the treasurer on Jan. 1, was $59.27.

Mr. James R. Lovett, the librarian also made his annual report. There are 378 volumes in the library, 34 having been added the past year. The number of books taken out has been 1438. During the year 75 books have been sent to new Sunday schools in the South.

Samuel Brown, foreman of the Old Colony paint shop at South Boston, is seriously ill, at his residence in Wollaston.

Work was finished last week on the improvements of the Wollaston Baptist church property. The improvements have been extensive, costing $7,500, and include the building of a large chapel and the refurnishing of the church.

The chapel is a model building of its kind. The interior and exterior closely resemble the church in architectural features. It has a seating capacity of 250. Connected with the chapel, by sliding doors, is the primary department with its rows of minature chair. Leading from this room is a large kitchen with a mammoth gas stove in one corner and other kitchen furniture conveniently arranged. In the construction of the gallary a novel feature has been introduced. Instead of having the front of the gallery open, ground glass windows have been put in, so that when they are down the gallery is shut off from the chapel, making it into the ladies' parlor. This parlor is tastefully furnished and decorated, and is lighted by two polished brass chandeliers. The church auditorium has been entirely refurnished and recarpeted. The settees, which have been in use since the church was built, have been replaced with substantial pews, made of black birch, polished and heavily cushioned. The chapel and church are heated by a Smith & Anthony steam heater.

The alarm from box 56 last Saturday afternoon was for a fire in a dwelling house situated on Newport avenue near Brook street, Wollaston.

The fire originated in an eve closet, opening from the finished attic, and was probably caused by spontaneous combustion.

Wollaston has not entered very enthusiastically into the DAILY LEDGER's popularity contest: Edward Preston has five, but should have a thousand.

The new Unitarian church at Wollaston approaches completion, but owing to the severity of the weather, work on the outside does not progress as rapidly as could be wished. This young, enthusiastic and prosperous society is getting quite eager to have full occupancy of its building, the prospect being that much good work will be done within its walls after its completion.

The special services begun in the M. E. Church, Wollaston, last week have been continued during this week and are to be held next week Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday nights. The meetings are largely attended while the interest increases daily. Mr. F. F. Davidson will again have charge of the meeting on Friday night, and will be present on Sunday during the entire day to assist the pastor. Seven persons were received into the church last Sunday.

A sleigh party of fourteen from Boston and a party of six from Hyde Park, had supper Thursday evening at the Robertson House.

The Rev. W. S. Key will preach a discourse next Sunday morning at 10.45 in the schoolhouse, on, "Which is the true church?" All seats are free.

Post Office Business.

The city has enjoyed free postal delivery for a year, during which time the carriers have handled over half a million pieces, as follows: January, 34,137; February, 36,591; March, 44,932; April, 45,381; May, 46,984; June, 47,668; July, 47,939; August, 47,801; September, 54,366; October, 59,038; November, 51,373; December, 79,001; the year, 595,211.

The receipts of the office show an increase for the year of $2,131.63.

The weight of newspapers mailed by publishers the last quarter was 1800 pounds. Hardly up to Boston which in the year ending last July received 5548½ tons.

The carriers were the busiest the past month than in any other month of 1890, handling 79,001 pieces. Below are the figures in comparison with January and November:

For the Patriot

Wedding Party.

The New Year was ushered in with a pleasant marriage festival at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. William Faxon on Canal street, the contracting parties being their eldest daughter Miss Nettie, and Mr. Walter D. Littlefield a promising young man of this city. The ceremony was performed by Rev. D. M. Wilson. Miss Moreland played the wedding march as the bridal party entered the prettily decorated parlor. The bride's dress was a heavy cream satin, cut with a V shaped bodice, high sleeves and a Japanese train; she wore a long tulle veil which was looped with white roses and pearls and carried a boquet of roses. The groom was attired in full dress suit with a white satin vest. A large number of relatives of the bride and groom were present to offer their congratulations. At 12 o'clock a bountiful supper was served, when the bride appeared in an evening dress of peacock blue satin.

The Social club held its third assembly at Music hall, Atlantic, Friday evening.

Services have been held every evening this week at the Memorial church.

The Shea & Williams combination appeared before a full house at Music hall, Atlantic, Tuesday evening.

Business at the Atlantic depot has increased so much that two carriages are now needed to accommodate the people who want to ride.

The Merry Mount Yacht Club held its annual meeting at the Engine House on Wednesday evening. The following officers were elected:

Commodore,—O. F. Lathrop.
Vice Commodore,—W. E. Burrill.

The funeral of Henry Douglass, of Atlantic, who died last Saturday of heart failure, was held from his late residence on Walnut street Monday. Rev. J. H. Yeoman officiating.

The engine of the train leaving Boston at 12.30 for West Quincy, Monday morning, became derailed at Atlantic by the wheel rising up on the point of a switch, which left it in such a position that both the main line and the outward branch tracks were blocked. No one was injured and the only damage done was to delay trains, which were obliged to go round the branch and there were no trains between Atlantic and Braintree on the main line for an hour or two.

The Atlantic Young Men's Lyceum held a hand ball tournament at their gymnasium last Saturday evening, the plays, which were very close and exciting, resulting as follows:

Players.	Won	Lost	Tied	To be played
Mahoney and Lyons,	2	0	1	1
McLean and Cunniff,	2	1	0	0
McCarthy and Mahoney,	2	1	1	1
Canty and Whelan,	0	3	0	0

The tournament will be finished next Saturday evening, when, if McCarthy and Jerry Mahoney succeed in defeating Joseph Mahoney and Lyons in the play off of the tie game, it will result in a tie between the three leaders.

Atlantic has two candidates for the DAILY LEDGER gold watch: Mr. Frank Hatch employed at Thomas Gurney's, and D. W. Osborne employed at Timberlake & Small's. Why not have a little contest all by ourselves between the two stores.

Miss Jennie Coombs, clerk at the Atlantic post office, is quite sick with tonsilitis.

An effort is being made to form a commandery of the Order of Golden Grail at Atlantic.

The Young People's Dramatic Club of Atlantic is arranging for an entertainment to be given soon.

Rev. Edward Robinson, of Wollaston, occupied the pulpit of the Memorial church Atlantic, Wednesday evening.

A number of the Y. M. C. A. of Somerville will take part in the evening service at the Memorial church, Sunday.

The Ladies' Benevelent Society, connected with the Memorial Church, are to hold an entertainment and supper next Wednesday evening.

The Sunday evening services of the Memorial church opened a new departure last Sunday by having the praise service led by an orchestra under the direction of Mr. H. H. Bemis.

Brockton's Progress.

The Brockton Daily Enterprise of Saturday was an interesting double number. The publishers thought the opening of the new year a fit season for a retrospective glance at the city's progress, and the issue contains a lengthy illustrated record that cannot but redound to the glory and prosperity of Brockton. Every Brocktonian will admit that such an interesting array of facts is beneficial to the city, yet it is what live newspapers are doing every day, working harder to boom the city than any other agency. The Enterprise has been largely instrumental in making Brockton the prosperous city that she is.

Brockton now has a population of 27,272, a gain of over 100 per cent in a decade. She produced last year over nine million shoes, having 73 firms engaged in the manufacture. Real estate is active, and hundreds of acres are yearly divided into house lots. Many large business block have been erected during the year. Among the projected structures are a public library and soldiers memorial hall, a city hall, court house, and possible a government building and hospital.

In Other Cities.

Voters have decided that licenses may be granted in Fitchburg. The population makes the limit twenty-two but Mayor Graves asks the aldermen to restrict the number to 6.

Brockton increased her debt $103,405 during 1890.

Salem has no city auditor, and Mayor Rantoul discourages the establishment of the office. He does, however, favor a superintendent of schools.

In Lowell the council and in Lynn the aldermen are equally divided between the two parties, and there were deadlocks over the election of presidents.

Mayor Mayberry, of Waltham, is the son of Dr. Edwin Mayberry, of Weymouth and is but 31 years old.

Waltham's "net ordinary funded debt" is $258,413.02, and the city is within 64,706.99, of its borrowing capacity. The amount that can be raised this year for city purposes is $168,337.61.

In Mayor Keith's inaugural is found the following concerning Brockton's street department:

This department has not been an idle one during the past year, it having disbursed some $85,000. More than nine thousand feet of edgestones have been placed, and thirty-one street crossings have been laid, beside crossings at all intersecting streets with Main street from Forest avenue to South street. The report shows that seventy-six streets have received the attention of this department, and the expenditure of sums varying from $4 to $31,000; that 1500 tons of stone crushings have been used, and is supplemented by a suggestion that the paving of Main street be extended north to Ford street and south from Clifton avenue to the West Bridgewater line, and a recommendation that the appropriation for 1891 be at least $50,000 to be divided as follows, to wit:

For paving,	$15,000
For edgestones,	6,000
For new streets,	5,000
For general repairs,	18,000
For macadamizing,	6,000

Mayor Bean of Woburn finds that the sum that that city can lawfully expend the current year for city expenses, is but $104,581. The valuation of the city is $8,918,306. Our twin city is, as the Mayor expresses it, relatively speaking, a poor city. The wonder to Quincy is, how Woburn can get along with that small amount.

The new city of Marlboro is to have a City Marshal and eight police officers.

SOUTH QUINCY.

St. John's C. L. & A. A. attended communion at St. John's church Sunday morning at 8 o'clock, in a body.

Charles Jones, driver of the Steamer has so far recovered from his injury received last week by a kick from a horse, that he is able to be about but not able to take his position as driver of the Steamer.

A jolly sleigh party left South Quincy Tuesday evening for a good time, returning early in the morning.

Miss M. A. Spear, formerly teacher in Willard school, who has been visiting her sister, Mrs. J. Williams of this city, left Tuesday for West Chester, Pa.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Mitchell of South Quincy, who have been visiting friends at Taunton for the past few weeks returned home Wednesday.

Mr. and Mrs. James Vincent of South Quincy have gone to Holyoke for a week's vacation.

Odd Fellows' Visitation.

Some fifty of the members of Mt. Wollaston lodge No. 80, I. O. O. F., participated in the visitation of that lodge to Crescent lodge, No. 82 of East Weymouth, Thursday evening, and judging from the remarks which the brothers were heard to make they were well repaid for their visit, for they not only had an opportunity to become better acquainted with many of the brothers of neighboring lodges, but to witness the exemplification of the initiatory degree, which owing to the peculiar position of the writer forbids criticism. Suffice to say, it compared favorably with the work done by other lodges.

The work over, post prandial exercises were in order, D. D. G. M., Walter W. Hersey, of Hingham being the first speaker. He was followed by Brothers Nathan Ames, Franklin Jacobs, Arthur W. Stetson, Walter H. Cobb, George W. Tuckerman, George W. Taylor and Charles B. Tilton of Mt. Wollaston lodge, of Quincy, Henry T. P. Bates of Cohasset lodge, W. H. North of Mt. Vernon lodge of West Medford, Lester M. Pratt and James M. Dunbar of Crescent lodge, and members of Tremont and Medford lodges.

At the close of the meeting an opportunity was given the visitors to inspect the building, after which a supper was served in the banquet room. After which the visitors boarded their sleigh and left for home, with many a hand shake, and mid the music of numerous horns in the hands of the lively ones.

Visitations of this kind are what is needed among lodges, for it not only revives the interest and tends to create a better attendance at regular lodge meetings, but creates a pleasant rivalry among the officers of the several lodges which is productive of much better work in the several degrees.

District Court, Quincy.

John Mounsey of Quincy drunk, $9.

The case of John Furlong of Weymouth, for assault on his mother, came up for sentence Saturday, when he was found guilty and ordered to pay a fine of $9.

Michael Comfort, a tramp, was sent to the State farm at Bridwater for six months.

We are pleased to correct the report of Harry Prout's case, which came before the District Court on New Year's day. James Robinson, who complained of Mr. Prout, had been off on a drunk, came back and demanded more money, so as to continue his debauch, and as Mr. Prout did not owe him anything, and was not willing to advance him money, he commenced a quarrel, which ending in his getting some severe bruises; but Mr. Prout denies kicking him as was reported.

Quincy Lockup Record.

The number of arrests made and committed to the Quincy lockup for the year 1890 was as follows:—For assault, 13; drunkeness, 108; larceny, 11; tramps, 42; breaking and entering, 4; violation City ordinance, 7; peddling without license, 4; liquor nuisance, 6; disturbing peace, 5; malicious mischief, 2; lottery, 1; embezzlement, 1; fraud, 2; manslaughter, 1; escaping from officer, 1; setting fire, 1; obtaining money by false pretences, 1; truancy, 1; common drunk, 1; non support, 1; rape, 1; violating fish law, 1; disturbing meeting, 1; number of lodgers, 629.

In the inaugural of Mayor Rantoul on Salem is found the following suggestion:

"The time can not be far off when it will be possible, either by purchasing gravel pits near street railway tracks now in existence, or through the laying of new tracks near some of our present sources of supply, to deliver cheap gravel, by a night transportation service, at many of the principal points where gravel can be advantageously used.

The cost of carting this bulky article by horse power for any considerable distance is so great as to be prohibitory. Whenever gravel can be placed cheaply in large masses upon our leading highways, some improvements will at once be possible which can now only be postponed. The solid filling of our end of Essex bridge as far as low water mark, a portion measuring one-third of the Salem side of the structure, will then become expedient and will result in a large saving in annual repairs. The renewal of the draw, an item of some magnitude, cannot long be delayed."

Good For Brockton.

The net revenue of the Brockton post office is in excess of the total expenses. In other words the gross receipts were $35,559.00 and the total expenses $17,554.42. Congressman Morse succeeded Wednesday in getting the House public building committee to report favorable a bill for a $75,000, public building.

THE CITY COUNCIL.

Immediately after the inaugural ceremonies on Monday, the City Council of 1891 met and organized.

The roll was called by City Clerk Spear, to which the following responded: Messrs. Bass, Bryant, Drake, Duffield, Hammond, Hayward, Holden, Jones, Little, Morton, Moxom, Newcomb, Pope, Powers, Pratt, Roberts, Sherman, Spear, Thompson and Warner. Twenty out of a total of 23, Councilman Fallon being absent and there were two vacancies because of ties at the election.

President Unanimously Elected.

The first business was the election of a President, which the city charter provides shall be by roll call. The result was as follows:

Number of votes cast,	20
E. W. H. Bass had	1
James Thompson,	19

And Councilman Thompson was declared elected President.

The vote for Councilman Bass was cast by Councilman Thompson, and the election of President was therefore practically unanimous.

Councilman Thompson, in accepting the responsible position, so ably filled by ex-Presidents Federhen and Fairbanks, spoke as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL:—

By a mandate from your fellow-citizens is entrusted to you for the coming year the conduct of the legislative branch of this city government.

Undoubtedly the questions which will most command your attention are those relating to its material progress. Involved in these are the financial issues, and if the fact is not already patent to you it will be demonstrated to you early in the session. While our wants as a community are many its resources, the revenues at your disposal, are the reverse. By the law, for municipal purposes you are curtailed to an assessable rate of $12 per $1000 on the valuation of the city; the valuation being determined by the average of the three preceding years. In the past two years of the city government there was developed a sum barely sufficient to pay the yearly expenses of its various departments; and all the public improvements completed and in progress since the inception of the city government has been made by liberal drafts on the credit of the city. In this direction, the "debt limit," towards which rapid strides have been made, we are also curtailed by the law.

In view of these facts it is therefore needless for me to say undoubtedly every question involving the expenditure of the public money will receive from you that careful and earnest consideration which they deserve.

Extended remarks by me are unnecessary. Undoubtedly the same public spirit which has ever characterized the inhabitants of Quincy since its first settlement is the spirit which animates you, and you are here to do your whole duty.

Gentlemen, for this honor, for this mark of your confidence I thank you. With your assistance and forbearance it will be my endeavor to maintian in this position the high standard established by my predecessors.

Clerk Spear Re-elected.

The next business was the election of a clerk of the council, and Christopher A. Spear, who has ably and acceptably filled the position for two years was unanimously re-elected.

Choice of Seat.

Councilman Newcomb moved to proceed to the drawing of seats.

Councilman Sherman requested the privilege of retaining his seat during 1890.

Councilman Duffield made a similar request.

Councilman Jones objected unless all members in 1890 had the same privilege if they desired. He moved that all members in 1890 who wished, be allowed to retain their chairs, and the substitute prevailed.

The following five old members out of nine made the request: Sherman, Duffield, Jones, Morton and Warner. Councilman Fallon was absent, Councilman Thompson in the chair, and Councilman Bass and Newcomb indifferent. Singularly Councilman Newcomb drew his old number, the best in the chamber.

The desks are numbered from right to left, 12 being in the front row, and the assignments were as follows:

E. W. HENRY BASS,	8
CHARLES M. BRYANT,	14
JOHN E. DRAKE,	16
SILAS B. DUFFIELD,	2
PETER T. FALLON,	3
CHARLES L. HAMMOND,	18
J. FRANCIS HAYWARD,	17
JOHN O. HOLDEN,	12
FREDERICK L. JONES,	10
DANIEL C. LITTLE,	15
GEORGE W. MORTON,	13
STEPHEN O. MOXON,	4
THADDEUS H. NEWCOMB,	6
EDMUND POPE,	1
WILLIAM F. POWERS,	11
LESTER M. PRATT,	5
JOHN H. ROBERTS,	7
CHARLES R. SHERMAN,	21
SAMUEL H. SPEAR,	19
WILLIAM H. WARNER,	22

The desks for the Councilmen who will fill the vacancies are numbers 9 and 20 on the left, one in front of the other.

Rules of Order.

Councilman Newcomb moved that the rules which have governed the Councils of 1889 and 1890 be adopted until such time as others be proposed.

Councilman Sherman opposed. He had favored changes a year ago, and still believed they should be made. The committees were too large, and their reports did not give reasons for their recommendations. Thought the debates should come in the Councils rather than in the committees.

Councilman Jones thought it was the same old chestnut of the member from Ward Five. He thought the best thing the members could do would be to be more regular in attendance at Council meetings.

Councilman Newcomb favored committees. Reports could be debated in Council if desired. Committees were supposed to give all matters referred to them, careful attention.

Councilman Powers said he was not familar with the rules of the Council, and that the new members might study them, he moved that they be laid on the table until the next meeting. The motion prevailed.

Borrowing So Soon.

Councilman Bass offered an order authorizing the Treasurer to borrow $60,000 in anticipation of the taxes of 1891. Ordered to second reading.

Insuring Public Buildings.

Councilman Duffield offered an order favoring the insuring of the public buildings of the city and in support of it said every man who is in business knows it is good policy to insure his buildings, and would like to know why the city should not insure its buildings. Had the Wiliard school been insured the city would have been relieved of a heavy strain the past year.

Councilman Jones hoped the Council would defer action until it had heard the recommendation of the Mayor and moved that it be laid on the table until the Council had received the recommendation of the Mayor. It was so voted.

Trustees of Hospital Elected.

Upon motion of Councilman Sherman it was voted the Council proceed to elect two trustees of the City Hospital. The result was:

Councilman Sherman had	1
Councilman Little,	1
Councilman Duffield	12
Councilman Morton	15

Councilman Morton and Duffield were declared elected.

Special Election.

Councilman Bryant offered an order that a warrant be issued for a special election to be held Tuesday, Jan. 27, to elect one councilman from Ward Six and one councilman-at-large, the polling places to be the same as at last election.

Councilman Sherman moved to amend by striking out Hose House, Ward Five, and substituting at Perry's building.

Councilman Duffield moved to amend by striking out Avery's store in Ward Two and substituting Drake's stable.

Councilman Powers offered a substitute motion that the election be held Saturday, Jan. 24.

The substitute motion was lost and the original order was amended and accepted.

Adjournment.

Councilman Jones moved to adjourn until one week from tonight. Councilman Sherman moved to amend that the council adjourn until two weeks from tonight Jan. 19. The amendment was adopted and the council adjourned at 1.37.

To the Children of Quincy.

You have all had a very happy Christmas, made especially so by Mr. Faxon's generous personation of "Santa Claus," and now the PATRIOT again appeals to the children of Quincy, to raise $3,000 to endow a bed in the new hospital, to be named "The Children's Cot."

Every child can give one cent a week, some can give five cents and some ten cents, the mothers can give for the babies, and older people will be glad to help in such a good work. There are 5000 children under fifteen years of age in Quincy, and if all will give steadily and systematically, perhaps by Dec. 25, 1891, you can give to the Christ child, whose birthday is kept the world over, the beautiful present of a little hospital bed, and to each giver's heart will come the sweet message, from that "Glorified Child," "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethern, ye have done it unto me." B.

Mr. Geo. L. Gill at the Quincy Savings Bank has been requested to act as treasurer and he acknowledges as the first contribution as follows:

For "The Children's Cot," in memory of a dear baby, $1.

Gospel Temperance Service.

At the Congregational church Sunday evening at 7 o'clock, Capt. W. H. Whelan, of Boston, will conduct a Gospel Temperance service.

Capt. Whelan is a newspaper man of 20 years standing, and in his capacity as journalist has seen the ups and downs of life in a way that few men have experienced them. For a quarter of a century he was the victim of an insatiable craving for rum. A flask of whiskey was first held to his lips on the bloody field of Gettysburg in '63. From that day he was an aimless hopless wanderer on the face of the earth. He had plenty of native talent, and he was a capital newspaper man; but rum cast its blight on him everywhere. Four years ago, or a little more he was thrown from a train, while druuk, on his way to Pittsburg and he pulled a pistol to blow his brains out. It was in that desperate moment that he came to his senses. He has never touched a drop since of any description and today it is the mission of his life to paint the horrors of the rum traffic and point the way to a hopeful and a frnitful life.

The Capt. has told his thrilling story in many of the Boston churches to large audiences. He comes most highly commended by the Pastors of these churches. Let every one who would get help and help others be sure to hear him next Sabbath evening.

Dancing School Exhibition.

Last Saturday was a gala day for the pupils who comprise the dancing class of Mrs. S. E. Buffum, as it was the afternoon when the term closed, and they exhibited before their friends what they had learned in this graceful art.

The exhibition was given at Robertson hall from 2.30 to 4.30, and was attended by a large number of Quincy and Wollaston well-known ladies and a few gentlemen, who watched with a great deal of interest the nearly seventy-five scholars "trip it lightly and step it stately" in the march and several fashionable round dances.

The little ones certainly had been adept scholars, and their movements caused repeated applause from their mammas who were in the audience.

Besides the regular dances there was the "Arch dance" which was performed by sixteen masters and misses, all of whom were about the same size. In this dance the little misses wore white dresses with colored sashes, while the masters wore white waists and bright red sashes. They went in couples and carried an arch made of colored paper, and the varied evolutions they went through was wonderful and must have required much careful training.

Another feature of the exhibition was the "Sailors' Hornpipe," which was admirably executed by Masters Ernest Armstrong and Tyler Bridgham of Wollaston. These little fellows were dressed in neat sailor costumes and made as handsome a picture as one wishes to see, and the graceful manner in which they took the fine steps in this dance was bewitching.

Still another feature was the "Scotch reel" which was executed by Miss Jessie Rea, who was dressed as a highland lassie. This little miss who could not have been more than eight years of age went through the various movements of the reel in a fascinating manner that would have done the heart of a Scotchman good to see, for as she lightly skipped from one side of the hall to the other it seemed almost as though she had wings, so light was she upon her feet.

The exhibition which was a complete success closed with a grand march in which all the pupils joined.

A New Piano Within the Reach of All.

Reference to the announcement in another column of Ivers & Pond, will be of interest to all who desire what is almost as indispensable as a sewing machine, a good piano; as the terms on which they supply one of their noted instruments, are such that all can be accommodated. po

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, Jan. 7, 1891.

The proceedings on the opening day of the legislature were of high importance, although they were rather dry on the surface, for they indexed significantly the feelings of the parties and foretokened the proceedings of the session. In the first place, the history of the day began with the Republican caucus of senators the night before. Every member of the 20 was there, except Senator Rotch of Bristol, and they decided to renominate all of the old officers. On Wednesday forenoon were held three caucuses more—of Democratic senators and of Republican and Democratic representatives.

From what was given out, and from what has leaked out, it transpires that the Democratic senators concluded that they would give one complimentary vote for their senior member-elect, Mr. Howard of Bristol, and that then they would vote for President Sprague. The essential point in all this business, it must be remembered, was that there are 20 Republican senators and 20 Democratic, but that Governor-elect Russell could not be inaugurated till the senate had organized, for the oath of office to the new governor is always administered by the new president of the senate. So the Democrats were beaten by the sheer weight of constitutional requirements. It was of no use for them to try to create a deadlock, for the Republicans had the winning card over them.

But there was so much complaint, so one of the Democratic senators has said, about the Republicans, with only half of the senate, getting all of the offices, that they determined to make a stand for the sergeant-at-arms. Capt. J. K. Churchill, a Grand Army ex-commander of Worcester, was selected as their candidate, but by some fatality or design, when they came to a vote Senator Carpenter of Hampden, a Democrat, had stepped out. So Sergeant-at-arms Adams had 20 votes and Capt. Churchill had 19, and Adams was elected as smoothly as if the vote had been unanimous. The incident shows that the Democrats will try to get what they want, if there is any chance.

The house Republican caucus was over in a few minutes. All of the old officers were renominated by acclamation unanimously. Mr. Wardwell of Haverhill made the motion for the renomination of Mr. Barrett. Thus the house Republicans enter the session far more united than they did last year, after the long struggle between Barrett and Wardwell.

As there is a current feeling that there will be a great deal of politics in this session, the action of the Democratic house caucus is also important. It is to be observed that the Mellen affair amounted to very little. Predictions of a quarrel had been made, based on Mellen's strong language toward Mr. Quincy. But when the latter stated that he should not as chairman of the Democratic caucus committee consult Mr. Mellen as to Democratic policy, the former replied by defending his course and asserting that he was a loyal Democrat. This ended the matter, though it may break out in the debates hereafter.

Another important feature of the Democratic caucus was the vote that they believed that the business of the session could be transacted in four months and that they would exert themselves for prorogation as near May 1 as possible. This may stimulate the Republicans to rival effort and so the session may be materially shortened. But the political manœuvering will be decidedly against this, and it is expected that there will be a large amount of new and untried legislation, proposed especially on labor matters.

By the opening of the legislature only one entry had been made in the docket of "legislative agents" in the office of the sergeant-at-arms under the law of last year to regulate the lobby. This is of James W. Stockwell of Sutton, a farmer. He is employed by the Massachusetts State Grange to work upon the subjects of agriculture, taxation and education. It will be remembered that the State Grange is strongly in favor of the bill to forbid the coloring of oleomargarine and of some way to relieve the farmers from excessive taxation.

None of the regular lobby had registered up to the opening of the session, though some of them were ready to do so. The new law makes some of them squirm, and they wish with all their hearts it was off the books, but no more than do some of the big corporations which have habitually employed lobbyists to look out for them. Unquestionably every effort will be made to evade the law, and it will be extremely interesting to see what devices will be hatched to escape from its penalties. Not one of the regular lobby was to be seen about the State House on Wednesday.

RULE.

Services Appreciated.

A regular meeting of the Granite Manufacturers Association was held Tuesday evening at its room in the Durgin & Merrill's block. After the routine business came a happy surprise. Mr. Henry McGrath of the firm of McGrath Bros., has been president of the association for several years, and the members took the occasion to present him with substantial tokens of their regard and appreciation. The speech was made by President Thompson of the City Council, a member of the firm of John Thompson & Son, and the tokens consisted of a gold headed cane and a French clock with bronze ornaments, which were much admired by all, including Mayor Fairbanks who dropped in.

An adjournment was made to French's hall where a collation was served by Caterer Wales, and a good time enjoyed.

Handsome Donation to Hospital.

QUINCY, Jan. 6, 1891.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

DEAR SIR: The Trustees of the City Hospital of Quincy have today received from Mr. Joseph W. Robertson, the Vice President of the Board, his check for five thousand dollars to be added to the endowment fund of the hospital for the purpose of establishing a free bed to be called the "Joseph W. Robertson Memorial Bed."

Very truly yours,
TIMO. REED,
Secretary of the Board of Trustees.

Commissioner Resigns.

Commissioner Alexander has probably anticipated the wish of the new Mayor, to have his appointee assume the office of Commissioner of Public Works at an early date, and his action in placing his resignation in the hands of Mayor Fairbanks is commendable.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. A Boston lady, whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below: "In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I had taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, knew what it was, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other. When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly

NORFOLK, ss. December 20, 1890.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of Benjamin Johnson, of said Quincy, recovered against John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, of Quincy, at the Superior Court for this County, I have taken all the right that John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, had on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1890, that being the date the same was attached on mesne process, to a certain real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows:

A certain lot of land on West street, in said Quincy bounded northwesterly on West street thirty-five (35) feet; northeasterly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask one hundred and seventy (170) feet; southeasterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale two hundred (200) feet, as the stone wall runs; southwesterly on land now or late of John Wolfe two hundred and fifty (250) feet. Being a part of the premises conveyed to Edward V. Trask by deed of Charles H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 500, fol. 556, and by said Trask conveyed to John Reichart, by deed dated Feb. 2, 1888.

Also I have taken all the right in equity that you had on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1890, to redeem a certain mortgaged real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows, viz: Northerly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask ninety-five (95) feet; easterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale eighty-eight (88) feet; southerly on land of the same and of the said Edward V. Trask fifty-eight (58) feet, the angle of the easterly and southerly bound being marked by a birch tree; westerly on land now or late of said Trask one hundred and fifty (150) feet. The above described land being a part of the premises conveyed to said Trask by deed of C. H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 550, fol. 556, and by him conveyed to John Reichart by deed dated March 16, 1886, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 579, fol. 230.

Said last mentioned and described lot of land being the same described in a mortgage deed thereof from you to Joseph H. Vogel for eight hundred dollars, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds for said County, lib. 579, fol. 231, also in the mortgage deed thereof from you to E. H. Doble et al. for two hundred dollars, and recorded in the said Registry of Deeds, lib. 601, fol. 344, and on the 30th day of January next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence off Franklin street in said Quincy, I shall offer for sale to the highest bidder, at public auction, all your right and title in and to said first described and bounded lot of land, and also at the same time the aforesaid right in equity of redemption, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

In the Twilight.

As we grow old, our yesterdays
  Seem very dim and distant;
We grope, as those in darkened ways,
  Through all that is existent;
Yet far-off days shine bright and clear
  With suns that long have faded,
And faces dead seem strangely near
  To those that life has shaded.

As we grow old our tears are few
  For friends most lately taken,
But fall—as falls the summer dew
  From roses lightly shaken—
When some chance word or idle strain,
  The chords of memory sweeping,
Unlock tha flood-gate of our pain
  For those who taught us weeping.

As we grow old our smiles are rare
  To those who greet us daily,
Or, if some living faces wear
  The looks that beamed so gaily
From eyes long closed—and we should smile
  In answer to their wooing.
'Tis but the past that shines the while
  Our power to smile renewing.

As we grow old our dreams at night
  Are never of the morrow;
They come with vanished pleasure bright,
  Or dark with olden sorrow;
And when we wake the names we say
  Are not of any mortals,
But of those in some long dead day
  Passed through life's sunset's portals.

Household Receipts.

POTATO CAKES are extremely nice for breakfast. To make them, take one pint of mashed potato, one pint of flour, two tablespoonsful of butter, a little salt, milk sufficient to make a thick batter, and half a teacupful of fresh yeast. Mix the ingredients, and let the batter rise until it is light; then bake in muffin-tins or gem-pans. Serve in a vegetable dish.

STEWED TRIPE. Take the thickest and whitest tripe, cut it into thin slices and put them into a stewpan with a little white gravy, a spoonful of vinegar, a little lemon juice and grated lemon peel; add the yolk of an egg well beaton, with a little cream and chopped parsley; shake together over a slow fire uniil the gravy is as thick as cream, but do not let it boil. Serve with sippets of toasted bread.

CARROT PIE. A nourishing and healthy pie is made of carrots, supplying sulpher, iron and other substances needed to make rich and pure blood. Boil the carrots soft, and mash through a colander. For one pie use four large spoonsful of carrot, two eggs a pint of milk and flavor with nutmeg and sugar. For crust, mix equal quantities of white cornmeal and flour with a little salt, and mix with enough sweet cream to roll out like dough. Bake carefully, eat fresh, and if you are dyspeptic, you will make it again.

SCALLOPS. Chop fine a medium-sized onion and fry it with one ounce of butter; while the onion is frying chop fine also one quart of scallops and put them in with the onions; stir until half fried, then turn the juice off, put them back on the fire and add one ounce of butter and one gill of white wine; stir for two or three minutes, and if too thick add the juice you have turned off; take from the fire, mix the yolk of an egg with it and add a little grated nutmeg, finely-chopped parsley and salt and pepper to taste. Spread the mixture on scallop shells, dust with bread-crumbs, put a piece of butter the size of a hazel-nut on each and bake in a hot oven from ten to fifteen minutes.

INEXPENSIVE BREAKFAST DISH. A very nice and inexpensive dish for breakfast or lunch may be made from the shank of veal, or if that cannot be procured, the same part of beef. Boil slowly, until the meat is ready to drop to pieces. Now put the meat in a chopping boil, and after extracting carefully the bone and pieces of gristle, etc., chop it all very fine, adding salt, pepper and raw mustard to taste, and if you like, a couple of hard-boiled eggs. Add just a little of the liquor to moisten and put it in moulds. In twenty-four hours it will be hard enough to turn out; it should be cut in slices with a knife when served. The liquor will make a very good soup.

He Rose to Ask for Prayer.

Deacon B——, one of the oldest and most respected church members in Seattle, has a young grandson who is generally accounted the worst scapegrace in the whole congregation. The boy, who is ten years of age, has recently attended prayer meeting a number of times, and has apparently taken a great deal of interest therein.

Last week he attended the prayer-meetings, the boy arose to his feet. Everybody looked at him in surprise. He wore a very sorrowful countenance, and many thought that he was truly repentant for his wrongdoings. Every one listened while he opened his lips to speak.

"I would like," said the youngster, solemnly, "to ask the prayers of those assembled for my poor old grandfather!"

The boy sat down, and there was a constrained silence for a moment, after which some one suggested a song, and the meeting closed in the usual form.

It is needless to add that that youngster's jacket received a much-needed tanning before he retired to rest that night.—Seattle Press.

It's economical—Brussels soap.

A Cincinnati man engaged a truck and four men a few days ago and stole a twelve horse power steam engine. Neither man nor engine has been found yet. This is not quite up to the case of the woman who was tried at the quarter sessions in this city last year for stealing a two story brick house.—Philadelphia Press.

The Head Waiter—Is yo' gwine to tip me sah?

Mr. Hayborn—Lord, no! I won't touch yer. You ain't been very 'tentive, but I don't lay it up agin yer 'nough to lay hands on yer.

Clara—Quite pretty! Why I hardly recognized you.

In view of these facts the Proprietors of Van Wert's Balsam for the lungs have decided to give their patrons the benefit of the saving which they are thus able to make in the production of their remedies, and have therefore reduced the price of the Balsam and offer the bottle which has hitherto been sold for $1.00 for 50c. [Continued from First Page.] sidering the many drawbacks, I believe we should be congratulated upon the efficiency of the fire department during the past year, and the improvement in the working of the fire alarm service, and while the latter could be still further improved by the purchase of a four-circuit repeater, and the time is close at hand when the city must adopt the same, yet I believe it can safely be deferred until another year. I believe that the efficiency of the department would be greatly increased if portable fire extinguishers be attached to each hose carriage for use at light fires, preventing so much damage from water. The efficiency of this department would be greatly increased if the hose houses were built allowing the city to stable one of its horses in each building for use during the night, and the question must be considered in the near future when hose houses in Wards 2 and 3 are rebuilt. At the present time I would call your attention to the urgent need of a new building for the apparatus massed on School street. A large appropriation would be necessary to make the repairs so essentially necessary to render the present building fit for man or beast to stay in, and I believe that it would be a waste of the city monies to attempt any repairing, but a new commodious building with a suitable ward room, is by all means the best economy for the city. The present location is most desirable for the protection of the business and home interests of our city. The hydrant service should be increased, affording more protection to the thickly settled portions, and it adds greatly to the effective work of the department.

The hose house in Ward 2, is badly in need of repairs, and it may be best for the interests of the city, to have the same rebuilt during the present year, providing in the same building, also, a suitable ward room for the use of the citizens. I am of the opinion that the expense of same can be paid for from the current revenues of the year, and I will send to the council further information, at my earliest opportunity.

LAW DEPARTMENT.

I believe the true policy of the city should be to prevent suits rather than to defend against them, even successfully, for it should be borne in mind that even if the city obtains a clear verdict, it is attended by considerable expense. I do not wish to be understood as favoring settlements of cases without merit, which are brought against the city, but I believe that it is the duty to take every possible means to ascertain the true facts at the time of any accident, thus assisting the city solicitor in the discharge of his duties. As you gentlemen, are familiar with your own sections, I would thank you to send to the office, a notice of any dangerous defect in the highway that comes to your knowledge that the same may receive prompt attention, and I would ask the council to consider the question of amending the ordinance in relation to streets, by adding a new section, obliging the tenant of an estate abutting on a sidewalk to remove snow and ice from same within a specified time, which will prevent many accidents and suits against the city.

WATER SUPPLY.

The plan adopted by the last City Council in reference to a new water supply, has been forwarded to the state Board of Health, and their report on the same will be sent to you as soon as received.

CRANE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

This institution which we regard with so much pride needs no words of praise. It has its mission to perform, and continues to make its silent influence felt ever for good. Year by year its work increases, and its beneficial influence is far reaching and beyond computation.

The board of trustees is composed of a body of men from among our best citizens and they are keenly alive to the importance of its interests and its bearing upon the welfare of our city.

ADAMS ACADEMY.

The Academy continues to hold its place in the educational ranks, and through its work the world is benefitted by receiving into its ranks young men who have passed through a careful training in various branches of learning.

POOR DEPARTMENT.

An intelligent community are always desirous of furnishing those who are poverty stricken and friendless with the comforts and necessities of life, and to do all that the law requires to make their life more pleasant, and I can say from a perusal of the report of this department, that the duties assigned have been carefully performed, and the wants of the needy and deserving poor have been judiciously and faithfully attended to at a moderate expense to the city.

POLICE DEPARTMENT.

It is evident that a larger appropriation will be necessary for the support of this department during the present year, but I defer from any recommendation at the present time, but will send to the Council at an early date my views on this important question.

PUBLIC BURIAL PLACES.

The managers of the public burial places will bring to your attention the need of purchasing more land, to be devoted to cemetery purposes.

LICENSE QUESTION.

The citizens have again spoken in a most emphatic manner on the question, "shall licenses for the sale of liquor be granted?" and the significance of thei wishes shall not pass unheeded, and every method will be employed to carry their decision into execution, thus maintaining the benefits apparent on every hand by the abolishment of the saloon from our city.

HOSPITAL.

It is the duty of every city to aid and encourage by its financial resources, the noble work now being rendered by such an institution as the City Hospital of Quincy. The value of its work has been well proven during the past year, and the taxpayers will cheerfully sanction an appropriation in furthering the aims of this charitable organization, and I shall willingly recommend an appropriation in the budget.

CITY HALL.

It must be apparent to all who have occasion to have dealings with the city, that the City Hall is ill adapted to the needs of its various officials. The city is obliged to pay for the use of other office room at the present time, and suitable apartments must be provided for the board of sewer commissioners in the near future. I firmly believe that it would be the better policy, that all the departments should have their headquarters under one roof, and that it will be a wise economy to remodel the lower story with this end in view, of furnishing suitable accommodations, and providing for better sanitary arrangements, for those who are working for the varied interests of the city, also providing fire proof vaults for the safe keeping of the valuable records, the loss of which would be irreparable.

GARBAGE.

It is the duty of the city to take every measure possible to improve the health and comfort of its citizens, and the collection of the garbage should be continued during the present year, but I believe it to be wise to establish rules and regulations in regard to the collections, thus preventing the disposal of the same to private persons, who disfigure the streets and sidewalks by the careless methods employed by boys, in carrying the same away, and by the city collecting the whole, the revenue from its sale will be largely increased.

BROOKS.

A question which must soon receive careful and deliberate attention from the council, is that of deepening, straightening and widening the water courses of the city.

A careful survey has been made of Town and Furnace brooks, and I hope the members of the council will make themselves familiar with it, and thereby realize the difficulties of solving the problem of the better course to pursue.

Before the season arrives when any work can be done, I hope to send to the council a further report, with recommendations.

SEWERS.

The Council of 1890, instructed his honor the Mayor, to petition the General Court, for the necessary legislation, to construct a system of sewers, and at the proper time, I shall take the pleasure, with the aid of the Council, in appearing before the committee of the legislature in support of this much needed public improvement.

If the petition be granted, I believe that a Board of Commissioners, selected for their experience and successful business training, will be able to improve upon the minor details, remedy some defects, and furnish the city a satisfactory system of sewerage.

SHADE TREES.

Believing that the streets of our city can be vastly improved by the systematic planting of shade trees thereon, and deeming it wise to look forward to the future for results, I shall recommend a small appropriation for this purpose, for the present year, trusting that if the same is done in after years, that the improved appearance of our highways, will be one magnet in inviting new residents to our city.

CONTINGENT FUND.

Believing that the citizens have the right to demand that all questions referred to the Council should receive careful consideration from its members, and, when possible, personal investigations be made, that the subject matter be thoroughly understood, I shall recommend a moderate appropriation for the use of the Council, believing that the taxpayers do not desire that those who so willingly give their services to the city, should perform these labors thus devolving upon them at their private expense.

I shall trust that the good judgment of the council will see the wisdom of establishing a rule to govern the expenditures of this appropriation.

WOODWARD FUND.

This fund has been increased during the past year, by large sales of land, and now amounts to nearly $261,000, and the time is close at hand when the city will have the pleasure of having another educational institution in its midst.

CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY.

In February, 1892, occurs the Centennial anniversary of the incorporation of the town of Quincy, and I would recommend that some notice be taken of the event.

If this meets with your approval, I would suggest that to a special committee of the council, be added citizens of each ward, to assist in perfecting all arrangements.

As the financial year of our city does not end until December 31st of each year, an incoming Mayor is deprived of the valuable information which should be contained in the reports of the several departments, and which would enable the citizens to be informed at the beginning of another year, as regards the work that has been performed. A careful study of these reports will be necessary, before arriving at a correct judgment of many important questions. These reports will be submitted to you gentlemen, in due time.

The City of Quincy cannot stand still, with her natural advantages, her granite industries, schools, public library, religious and other educational institutions, her growth should be rapid; progress should be her motto, but progress does not mean extravagance, and correct conclusions in regard to those improvements which will conduce to her prosperity, and which I have called your attention to, can only be solved by a careful study of each question as it presents itself, and weighing it, in its bearings upon all other questions.

I sincerely trust that the year will be one of prosperity and growth to our city, that the business entrusted to our care will receive the attention it deserves. The administration will be more wisely judged at the end, than at the beginning, for the citizens have a right to expect results rather than promises, and "may the supreme power whose aid we invoke today, inspire us to administer the government wisely, with purity of purpose, and our acts rebound to the honor and glory and good name of the City of Quincy."

A tramp who stole a box of Brussels soap, concealed his identity by washing himself with a cake of it.

Boston Theatres.

Tremont.

Next week the First Corps of Cadets, our most renowned military organization, will take possession of the Tremont theatre stage, not exactly vi et armis, but on "pleasure bent" will present therefrom the operatic-farce tragedy, "Injured Innocents." The entire corps has put heart and soul into the rehearsals of the tragedy, and there can be no question as to the excellence of the presentations. The principals have gained greatly in ease and finish of interpretation, and from the pride of our citizen soldiery has been selected scores of shapely and comely ballet boys. Moustaches have faded away, grace of bearing and ease of carriage have been substituted for military "setting up," and voices have been tempered to the charming music to be sung. All the fashion and wealth of the city will be represented at the performances, and the fund for the new armory will increase with the celerity and magnitude of Alladin's Palace.

Boston Museum.

"The Solicitor" and "Betty's Finish" still continue to reign at the Museum and draw large audiences who enjoy spending a few hours in wholesome laughter. Both pieces create considerable fun, and are therefore very popular with the masses. Matinees, Wednesday and Saturday afternoons.

Boston.

"The Crystal Slipper" will be produced at the Boston theatre Monday night, today winding up the long run of that popular play "The Soudan." The costumes and scenery for "The Crystal Slipper" are said to be much handsomer than when it was produced her last winter, and the present engagement will be a brilliant success.

Hollis Street.

Jan. 12th for one week only, "A Straight Tip" will be presented, at the Hollis, with James T. Powers in the leading role, and a company of well known all over the country and is a favorite comedian.

There's a great difference in lamp-chimneys—depends on the glass. One pops whenever anything happens, sometimes when nothing happens. Another almost never breaks.

Lamp-chimneys are like segars—they cost so little apiece and so much by the year!—the breaking kind. The other sort is like the measles—once is enough.

Can you tell them apart? The unbreakable chimney has a "pearl-top." The makers, Macbeth & Co. Pittsburgh.

Temperance.

Furnished for Publication by W. C. T. U.

Education in Public Schools.

The preventive work for temperance now going on in the United States, known as temperance education in the public schools, is rising like a star of hope for other lands. In 1887 this instructton concerning the nature and effects of alcholic liquors and other narcotics was introduced into the schools of Honolulu, Sandwich Islands. In the following year one of the American text-books on the topic was translated into Japanese and is now in use in the schools of that country. In Australia temperance education is made compulsory in primary grades.

The Siamese minister of education has recommended the translation and introduction of one of the American temperance physiologies into the government schools of that country, where not only alcohol and tobacco, but opium and Indian hemp as well have united in their work of extermination. A resident missionary of Siam, writing to Mrs. Mary H. Hunt, the originator and leader of the temperance education movement in this country and now superintendent of the same for the World's W. C. T. U., says that among the Siamese there is hardly one temperate man in 100, that she has never seen a man or boy among them who did not use tobacco and some use opium and Indian hemp as well, and that the blood of the whole race is vitiated by these poisons. One slave to opium said that "if his mother's flesh were opium he could cut it out piece by piece and smoke it."

In India, where drink is said to be on the rising tide among the masses, the missionaries are looking to physiological instruction as a means of saving the coming generation from the threatening evil and are actively engaged in a movement for securing the introduction of the study into the government schools. Mr. Maurice Gregory of the Bombay Guardian, the Rev. H. C. Stuntz, editor of the Indian Witness, and other missionaries in the Madras Presidencey, in Bombay, Calcutta and Northern India are in correspondence with Mrs. Hunt concerning the preparation of the necessary text-books and other ways and means essential to the success of the movement.

Application for copies of the American temperance physiologies have also been received from Turkey, where, according to the Rev. A. Fuller, President of the Central College of Turkey, tobacco is almost a greater curse than alcohol.

Other countries in which movements have been begun for the introduction into the schools of this saving knowledge of the narcotics, which are weakening the strong and destroying the weak of all races, are, France, Austria, Bulgarir, Denmark, the Danish West Indies and England. Several leading philanthropists of the latter country have written for copies of the American school text-books on this topic, and the British Womens' Association is preparing to work actively for the introduction of this study into the British public schools.—The Congregationalist.

The Printer's Protest.

O, why don't people form their a's,
And finish off their b's—
Why do they make such crooked c's
And such confounded d's?

Why do they form such crooked e's.
And f's with ague fits?
Their g's and h's are too much
For any printer's wits.

What a human eye is without sight
Is an i without a dot.
J's are such curious looking things
We recognize them not.

K ought to stand for cussedness
But comes in well for kick,
L's and m's are mischievous,
When n's just raise Old Nick.

O's are rarely closed at all.
And p's are shaggy things,
Q's might as well be spider's legs,
And r's mosquito wings.

Some people make a passing s,
Who never cross a t;
Others use the self-same strokes,
To form a u or v.

W's get strangely mixed,
X's seem on a spree.
Y is a skeleton on wires,
Zounds, how we growl at z.

& yet, just think what typos get
From drivers of the quill;
They call us such a careless set,
And scribble on at will.

Well, they will scribble and we must growl,
And vainly try to please,
Till they go back to school and learn
To make their a b c's.

Miscellany.

BRAVE PAUL MADDEN.

"Here, let me help you, my lad. Why that bucket is almost as large as you are."

Paul Madden looked up with undisguised wonder at the tall, brown-bearded stranger who had relieved him of the heavy pail of water he was carrying up the hillside to the tavern.

He was quite unused to anything of that sort. Ever since he was seven years old—and he was twelve now—he had carried that bucket filled with water from the spring half a dozen times a day, and no one had ever offered assistance, though the loungers on the tavern porch must have noticed the frail little fellow struggling up the steep slope.

Paul scanned this new friend with deep admiration as he trotted behind him along the narrow path. What pretty gray clothes he wore, and polished boots, and such an odd round-shaped hat! He didn't belong anywhere near Redman's Cave, that was certain. The men Paul knew never spoke in such soft, pleasant tones, nor had any of them blue eyes that seemed to smile of their own accord, or a pointed brown beard and moustache.

They parted company at the top of the hill, the stranger with a cheery nod mounting the rickety porch, while Paul, too abashed to even say "Thank you," hurried round to the rear of the tavern, where old Susan was impatiently waiting for the water.

Paul's mother had died years ago, before Jonas Madden moved from the little village up to this desolate mountain settlement, and deprived of a mother's care and sympathy the boy's life had been dreary enough.

His father neglected him, and old Susan, in the multitudinous cares of the cookery and the housekeeping, scarcely found time to mend his torn clothes even.

Redman's Cave was a lonesome place. The nearest village was eight miles off, and though few travellers ever found their way up the mountain, certain activity and bustle were always to be observed at Jonas Madden's tavern.

Gaunt mountaineers, with high boots and grizzled faces, were continually going and coming—some on foot and some on horseback or in buckboards—and many a night, from his little bedroom, over the bar, Paul had listened timidly to the strife and tumult going on below.

Little wonder that the boy bred amid those surroundings was quick to realize the contrast between such people and the stranger that had come that afternoon. The latter sat at the rude supper table with a certain grace and dignity that seemed to awe the uncouth men about him, nodding pleasantly at Paul from time to time, and later, when the sun was setting gloriously down the valley, he propped his chair back on the porch and sat calmly smoking, oblivious, apparently, to the suspicion that his presence and appearance seemed to have aroused among the sullen-faced mountaineers.

The men drew apart in knots and conversed in low, cautious whispers, signs that Paul noted with a vague uneasiness. He trudged back to the rude stable where the stranger's horse was tethered in company with one or two others—gaunt, powerful mountain beasts—and climbing to the loft above began to throw down great forks of hay. In the dark shadow of the building that lay toward the mountain some men were talking, and their voices came indistinctly to Paul's ears.

He worked on unheeding until a single sentence, pitched in a louder key, caused him to drop the fork and tiptoe cautiously across the shaky floor. He knelt down with his ear close to cervice and listened breathlessly.

"You're sure of it, are you?" said one of the men gruffly, whose voice Paul did not recognize.

"Sartin," was the reply. "What else could he be doin' round hyer? He's a gover'ment spy, Bill, an' no mistake."

"An' how d'ye know he's a goin' ter leave tonight?" asked the first speaker.

"Why, didn't I hear him tell Madden? 'I'm a going on to the next village tonight,' he says. 'It'll be nice an' moonlit fur ridin'. He suspicious us, that's what it is. I tole yer not to go whisperin' around open."

"An' whar shall we do him up?" broke in the gruff voice savagely.

"Well, I reckon the burnt cabin'll be the best place. You know"—Here the speaker's voice sunk to a whisper, and in a moment more the men were gone.

Paul still leaned against the boards, too frightened to move. That conversation had been no mystery to him. The stranger's life was in danger. These men were going to wait for him at the burned cabin a mile down the valley.

That much Paul understood perfectly, the rest vaguely. He knew that "government spy" was a dreaded word at Redman's Cave, and he was aware that "noonshine whiskey" was a staple product in the region, but of the connection between the two he was very ignorant.

He waited a little longer in his hiding place, and then, sliding the shaky ladder, he strolled carelessly back to the tavern. The stranger standing on the porch greeted him with a pleasant smile. A group of sullen faced men in the door-way glanced him over carelessly as he passed between them.

Paul walked straight on and climbed the rickety stairs to the little back room. The one window opened on the mountain, over whose crest the moon was just peeping. The lad raised the sash and looked timidly out.

"I must save him—I must," he repeated in a whisper. "He was kind to me—I don't want him to get hurt."

Still he waited irresolutely, not knowing what to do. He dare not warn the man openly; that would be perilous to both of them. No, there was only one way—only one.

With a little shudder Paul threw one foot over the sill and then the other. Twisting his body round he clung fast for a moment and then dropped lightly to the ground. The noise of his fall was slight. He was on his feet instantly and speeding into the undergrowth at the base of the mountain.

He circled widely round the barn, taking good care to tread on no dry branches, and then broke into a run over the stony, uneven ground. The moonlight scarcely penetrated the straggling timber and the tangled undergrowth. He pushed on blindly in the darkness, tripping on thorny vines and bruising his limbs on stones and fallen logs, but his mind never wandered in its purpose.

Once, as he paused for a brief breathing spell, he fancied that he heard the dull tramp of hoofs somewhere behind him. Like a flash he was off again, not daring to take to the open road, which zigzagged down the valley almost at his side, but clinging to the darkness of the forest. At last, bruised and bleeding, panting for breath, he staggered into a little ravine that echoed to the brawling music of a mountain brook, and crawling a few yards along this he came out on the road that crossed the stream on two logs.

Up the valley a few wavering streaks of moonlight shone through the overhanging foliage. Beyond him, less than a quarter of a mile distant, was the burnt cabin, and there, behind the ruined framework, the ruffians were awaiting their victim. Paul crouched behind a fallen tree. His heart was beating violently. He had chosen this spot of interception for a special purpose. There was danger behind and in front, but just here lay one chance of safety, one avenue of escape for this foolhardy stranger.

Hark! the tramp of hoofs floated in hollow echoes down the valley. He was coming now. Under cover of his tree Paul waited. Up the road a dark shadow flitted across the streaks of moonlight, and as the horse and rider trotted boldly down the slope Paul slipped noiselessly forward and grasped the bridle.

"Don't shoot. It's only me, Paul, you know," he whispered excitedly, as the man in sudden alarm drew a shining object from his breast. Briefly the lad explained the situation.

"Get off the horse quick!" he exclaimed, "Give him a cut with the whip and send him on toward the cabin, so they'll think you're a comin'. Then I'll show you the way over the mountain. Quick! quick! They say you're a gover'ment spy. They'll shoot you, sure!"

The man hesitated a moment, but asked no questions. He doubtless realized his peril.

"You have risked your life to save me," he said. "Come, my boy, I will follow your guidance."

He flecked the horse lightly on the flanks with his whip, and as the animal clattered over the bridge and down the mountain road they turned up the ravine. Scarcely had the horse gained the opposite slope when the tramp of hoofs ceased, and then came a sharp, angry cry.

"Were discovered, cried Paul; "they've found the horse, and they know this path, too," he added, with sudden alarm; "we may beat 'em yet, though; come on and stick close to me."

As they hurried up the face of the mountain, clinging to the rude semblance of a path that the boy sought out, the angry cries of the baffled pursuers grew more and more distinct. Not a word was spoken until the ridge of the mountain was gained. Then Paul sank to the ground exhausted.

He staggered quickly to his feet, however, as a trampling of the undergrowth was heard only a few yards below.

"Go," he whispered eagerly; "go quick! Follow the path down the other side. It's open; you can't miss it. It'll take you to Possum creek. There's a boat there and the current's good."

The stranger pressed Paul's hand warmly.

"My name is James Ellis," he said. "I shall not forget you, my brave boy.

There was no time to say more. He glided silently over the crest and disappeared. His pursuers passed close to Paul's hiding-place.

"The boy has done this," said one of them, fiercely. "No one else knew the path."

Then they, too, pressed on down the other side. Trembling at every step, Paul crept down into the valley.

What would they do to him? he wondered vaguely. He limped painfully up the winding road, avoiding the moonlit spots and keeping in the shadow of the trees.

As he circled round the tavern, he could hear the shuffling of feet upon the porch. He reached the rear of the house. All was dark and quiet. He gained the low roof from the limb of a convenient tree and swung on to the window sill. With a sigh of relief he undressed, and getting into bed covered himself with the clothes.

Presently heavy footsteps were heard below, and hoarse, angry voices; then the door opened and shut, and tramp, tramp, tramp, came the tread of many feet up the shaky staircase.

"I tell you the boy is in bed sound asleep," Paul heard his father assert angrily and he had barely time to close his eyes and feign sleep when the door was flung open and half a dozen of rough mountaineers entered.

"Thar," said Jonas Madden, "what did I tell you fellers?" and he turned the rays of the lantern on the little figure under the bed clothes.

The men looked on without a word, and then, with much pretence of caution, edged back to the door.

"The idea of accusin' a child like that," Jonas Madden went on, indignantly.

"You fellers are too keerless, an' mebbe the man wasn't a government spy after all."

Then the door was closed, the heavy boots clattered down the staircase, and Paul knew that he was safe.

Two months later the revenue officers descended upon Redman's Cave. The moonshiners, taken by surprise, made no resistance, and all were captured.

Paul's stranger friend was in command of the party, and, mindful of the brave lad that had saved his life, James Ellis offered immunity from arrest to Jonas Madden on condition that he move into the town and engage in some honest business.

And thus began a new and happier life for Paul.—Philadelphia Times.

A Child's Heroism.

A little boy's heroism was tested not long ago through a mistake. The editor of a contemporary relates that a gentleman in a New England town proposed to drive with his wife to the beautiful cemetery beside the river beyond the town. Calling his son, a bright little boy some four years old, he told him to get ready to accompany them. The child's countenance fell and the father said:

"Don't you want to go, Willie?"

The little lip quivered, but the child answered, "Yes, papa, if you wish."

The child was strangely silent during the drive, and when the carriage drove under the wide archway, he clung to his mother's side and looked up in her face with pathetic wistfulness. The party alighted and walked among the graves and along the tree-shadowed avenues, looking at the inscriptions on the last resting-place of the dead. After an hour so spent, they returned to the carriage, and the father lifted his little son to his seat.

The child looked surprised, and drew a breath of relief, and asked:

"Why, am I going back with you?"

"Of course you are; why not?"

"I thought when they took little boys to the cemetery they left them there," said the child.

Many a man does not show the heroism in the face of death that the child evinced in what to him had evidently been a summons to leave the world.

How to Produce the Billionaire.

The billionaire, if he ever comes, will not be the result of any inevitable natural law. He will be simply the product of indirect taxation. Maintain that system, and he will surely come, and that right speedily. Abolish it, and he can never come at all. No elaborate calculations are necessary to make this plain, although the correctness of the assertion has been tested by such calculations over and over again. Every indirect tax distributes itself among the people in proportion to the cost of their support; in other words, it taxes them upon what they spend, not upon what they have. The vast majority of any community must always have incomes so small that they cannot help spending three-fourths of what they receive. But the small minority of large property-owners do not need to spend one eighth of their incomes; and, as a rule, they do not spend one-half. Looking at the subject with reference to accumulated wealth, the man who is worth $1,000 usually spends at least $500 a year on the support of his family, while the man who is worth $1,000,000 rarely spends $50,000. Indirect taxation, therefore, obviously bears at least ten times as heavily upon the former as upon the latter. Under absolutely direct taxation, no poor man would ever pay a larger share than a rich man, and, indeed, most of the working classes would pay no taxes at all; because the collection of direct taxes from them would be too laborious and expensive to be maintained. In many instances, rich men now pay only a hundredth part of the federal taxes which they would have to pay if they should be assessed at the same proportional rate as the mass of daily laborers. Upon the average, however, indirect taxation may be fairly stated to bear at least ten times as heavily upon the poor as upon the rich.—Thomas G. Shearman in the January Forum.

Nurses for Sick Travelers.

A Danish lady, Froken Nielsen, has recently founded an institution in Paris which will no doubt be welcomed by those who should be unfortunate enough to fall ill while traveling. Its name is "Institut Pour Gardes Malades Anglaises et Scandinaves," and it is situated 28 rue des Acacias. The work Froken Nielsen has set herself is not exactly confined to what the name of her establishment expresses, but she means to supply nurses who speak almost any language. Nor is the area limited to Paris, but nurses can be sent to all parts of France, and even as far as America. It is also intended to train French nurses at the institute.—New York Telegram.

Paper Shoes.

Paper shoes for horses are coming into widespread favor in Germany, the paper being compressed by hydraulic power, as paper railroad wheels are made here. The shoes are impervious to water and more elastic than the iron kind. Should the discovery be extended to foot-gear for "humans," it will obviously play havoc with the leather-trade. All a man will have to do then is to take along a couple of the Sunday newspapers, leave them and his measure at the factory as he goes to business and call in the evening for his pair of water-proof gaiters.—New York Evening Telegram.

Settle it Right Here.

Some people have a system, and through it are enabled to avoid many vexations in this world! When they see a good thing which must needs enter into their daily life, they adopt it, and ever after cling to it. All desire that which is best, yet cheapest, and many a good housewife, by settling on Brussels soap, for household use finds her every need supplied in this direction. Brussels soap has as yet no successful competitor. It's economical.

Sidewalks.

Allow us to indorse our new mayor's suggestions on sidewalks, so far as they pertain to Wollaston.

We are a village of pedestrians and of course use the sidewalks much more than the streets. Most of these walks have been made by the resident abutters at their own expense, leaving unmade or unfinished walks along the grounds of non-residents. Now comfort requires that we have continuous walks, properly made, with stone crossings of the streets. To make these passable in wet weather, some more thorough and uniform system of construction should be adopted. The city should own and care for them just as it now cares for the streets or carriage ways.

For the past two years, the condition of our streets and improvement of our walks, except in one or two favored localities, have been a poor return for the taxes we pay. Notice of needed repairs where the city was liable, has failed to engage the attention of the proper authorities. Again, economy demands that the city own the land from which the material is hauled. Why buy by the horse load and pay ten times the price of the land. Is such a true policy?

The Half Cent.

The petitions for the coinage of a half-cent piece which, it is understood, will be presented to the next Congress, may not be supported by any very urgent necessity, but it must be admitted that they have in them some elements of reason. It may be said, of course, that we have tried this thing once and given it up, and it is quite true that the old one-half cent, begun to coined in 1792, was discontinued in 1857 without remonstrance from the people. But though the people apparently consented to its discontinuance, they have gone on persistently recognizing in trade the half-cent value; and it may well be argued that values which play a considerable part in business dealings ought to be represented in a country's coinage either by a distinct coin or by a combination of coins. A half-cent would certainly be a great convenience in many kinds of business and it might do something toward promoting the exercise of economy. Indeed, the tendency of narrowing profits, which is everywhere easily traceable, must mean the more general use of the smaller fractional coins; and it would not be surprising if the half-cent should before long come into common demand for the same reasons that have brought the one and two cent pieces into use in sections of the country where until very recently they were practically unknown.

"Exactly as Written."

The following article contains more truth than poetry, and is from that excellent family paper, "The New England Farmer." We invite a careful perusal as it should be thoroughly read by those who ask the favor of a place in the columns of the paper:

"Once in a great while a correspondent sends us a communication, with the request "to print it exactly as written without changing or abbreviating, or do not publish it at all." Such a request never receives any attention. The managing editor of any good newspaper is always the best judge of the availability or aptness of a communication, and he is an expert in extracting the pith or kernel from any article. He is also the sole and only judge of the amount of space at his disposal. It is not always criticism of a correspondent that his article is abbreviated, because frequently more matter is presented for publication than there is room for in the paper, and something has got to give way."

A newspaper would be a queer looking and queerer reading affair, if the matter sent it for publication was printed "exactly as written," with its raw punctuation wrongly spelled words, crude sentences and ungrammatical grouping and expression. There isn't an editor in the world who could run such a gauntlet and come out alive at the other end, and there isn't a community in the world which would want him to.

Shoe Blacking and Cold Feet.

"When the leather in your shoes becomes old and begrimed with blacking, you will ascertain that the feet will be cold," remarked the old-time shoe dealer. "Then it is time to cast aside the shoes and use them to wear beneath arctics or for some other purpose. I have seen it referred to many times, but if you want to keep your shoes in good condition you must use vaseline on them often. The life will be kept in the leather, and, if rightly applied, you can shine the footwear just as well as if the preparation had never been used. Put in on at night when taking off the shoes. There is castor and like oil, also, that will as well serve the purpose, and keep your shoes and boots in good shape, imparting much greater warmth to the feet than if you allow blacking and the like to eat up all the life in the leather. When blacking commences to cake on the shoes, wash them with plain water, no soap."—Shoe and Leather Facts.

Costly Dinners.

New York has become a city of extravagance in dinner giving, and many of these entertainments, with all the delicacies of the season and rare wines, cost from $20 to $100 per cover. Of course the latter is the outside figure, but reckoning that one gives a dinner once a week to a party of, say, fifteen, at the first named figure it will prove a snug sum at the end of the year. In order to render these dinners complete and perfect, the hostess must possess a dinner service more or less elaborate, and it is rarely, if ever, that the majority of outsiders stop to consider what these consist of and how much money is spent in this direction. In the old Roman days, no greater magnificence could have existed in the way of table decoration, wines and service, than a millionaire New Yorker displays when his wife gives a large dinner.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Letter from California.

SAN JOSE, Jan. 3, 1891.

DEAR MRS. GREEN: Please find enclosed postal order for the PATRIOT and DAILY LEDGER for one year. They are both welcome visitors, for we like to hear the news from the city where we lived for nineteen years and left many friends, whom we cannot forget.

We like San Jose very much. The people are very nice, and we are getting accustomed to our new home. We have had no rain for six months until recently; it has now set in and everything looks nice and green. I have not seen any snow yet, and do not want to; I like this kind of winter. If it was as cold as it is in Quincy it would cost something to keep warm as coal is $14 per ton.

Last summer we drove about the country, and I never saw so many beautiful green fields and vegetable ranches without any rain. This is the way the farmers do it: They have windmills which pump the water; then they make ditches through which the water flows all over the ranch. They have plenty of water and fine vegetables all the year. They are sold at our door pretty cheap—radishes, three and four bunches for five cents; lettuce the same; cauliflower for five cents. I never was in such a place for vegetables, and they are so much better than those kept in the cellar all winter.

We also rode through a fruit ranch. I never saw such a lot of fruit before. Thousands of acres of all kinds. The trees were breaking under their weight. And I saw the fruit drying in the sun; thousands of tons, spread on trays all over the fields, and hundreds of men, women and children tending the fruit. They are not afraid of showers, as in the East. There was a large lot of figs last summer, and you could get one dozen for five cents.

A large number of houses are building but the land here is very dear, and you cannot get a very large lot for $500; but the people keep coming, and houses are being erected to accommodate them.

A large variety of flowers are now in blossom here; such as roses, lilies, pansies, mignonette, pinks, etc. They smell so sweet that you would not think it was winter. The citizens keep their flower gardens very nice; and the climate is favorable for them.

The markets are excellent. The butchers keep them clean and cool; and have wire screens in front to keep them nice; and are not troubled with flies because they do not keep groceries, and have customers coming in and going out all the time.

The city is well lighted with electric lights and we have one arc light 200 feet high, and it looks fine at night.

We used to say Quincy was a quiet place, but San Jose is more quiet. There are lots of bar-rooms but they are kept very orderly.

The streets are wide and there are such fine sidewalks that they do not seem to be overcrowded.

My husband is working for the firm of Bisson & Bisson who have just put in a new boiler and a 20-horse power engine, to do their granite polishing. They have plenty of work at the present time.

MRS. PETER BISSON.

Facts Worth Considering.

Political parties always start out and grow on moral issues. Like aged men, their leaders are fond of looking back to the virtues of youth, while they fail to see the growing corruptions of age.

In a recent conversation with one of our most worthy Quincy republicans, he asked the question, "If all the temperance legislation we had had, was not through the Republican party."

The Republican party was a legitimate child of Anti-slavery pedigree. Its origin was very humble. For many years the little waif was kicked and cuffed by both the Whig and Democratic parties. In spite of such treatment, it persisted in living and growing, because it fed on living moral issues—freedom and human rights.

In August, 1848, it got into breeches and was known as the Free Soil party. In 1856, it began to assert its manhood, and took the name it now bears. About this time, the old morally effete and waning political parties began to inquire, Who are you? And were answered! "We are a party with living moral issues. "We believe in Freedom and Fremont"—guarded and sustained by such leaders as Giddings, Lovejoy, Stevens, Wilson, and Sumner—men who believed in right before party or office, the youngster grew great and strong. In 1860, he reached a pure and noble manhood under the lead of Abraham Lincoln.

Up to this time the Republican party battled for purity and right. Its issues were moral. No tariff or Federal election sky rockets, were thrown up by the leaders, to divert attention from more vital issues.

Before 1855, Prohibitory laws were passed in Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, Rhode Island, Vermont, Michigan and Connecticut. Backed by such fearless and principled leaders as Neal Dow and Henry Wilson, the Republican party then meant temperance. How is it today? In our own state the party selected as its standard bearer, one, whose legislative record, in some 40 votes, showed him a full ally of the saloon. It repealed Prohibition and substituted high license. It voted to submit to the people a prohibitory amendment, and then, through the action of its party leaders, effected its defeat. To be sure, it has given our state "local option" which provides licensed cities and towns bordering, enough to accommodate our tipplers and ruined sots, who can afford a dime for fare, and another for beer or whiskey. In every one of the other Republican states referred to, the Prohibitory laws early passed, have been repealed or rendered nergatory by Republican legislatures, while a temperance sentiment—far in advance of these northern Republican States, has developed in such Democratic States as Georgia, South Carolina, Kentucky, Alabama, Missouri and Maryland.

Again, the 51st Congress, which adjourned last October, and which is Republican in both branches, passed only three measures which could be construed as in the interest of temperance, while it smothered in the various committees and failed to bring to a vote, twenty-two bills introduced; any one of which, was more vital to the temperance reform, than the three passed.

This, in brief, is the record of the Republican party in its relations to the temperance reform. How does this answer our friends query? We leave the reader to decide.

Mayor Fairbanks Takes Possession in Name of the City.

The turn of affairs relative to the new Willard schoolhouse, which took place Friday afternoon, show that our new Mayor is determined that the completion of the building shall not be retarded if he can prevent. There were fears that the failure of the contractors would indefinitely postpone the completion, and such might have been the case but for Mayor Fairbanks.

Friday afternoon about 1.45, Mayor Fairbanks, Commissioner-elect Ewell, Officer McKay and a representative of the PATRIOT were driven to the site of the new schoolhouse. Reaching their destination they found the unfinished structure deserted and padlocked. Foreman Loring was in the vicinity however and he soon allowed the visitors to enter.

After a brief inspection Mayor Fairbanks said: "I take possession of this building in the name of the City of Quincy." At the same time he handed to Officer McKay the following document, which is self explanatory:

CITY OF QUINCY, MAYOR'S OFFICE.
QUINCY, MASS., Jan. 16, 1891.

DANIEL A. MCKAY, Esq.,

DEAR SIR: You are hereby directed to take charge of the Willard school building and all property in the same or on the land adjoining. Permit nothing to be removed without an order from me.

HENRY O. FAIRBANKS, Mayor.

The important step was not taken unadvisedly. On Tuesday morning Mayor Fairbanks had served a legal notice that he should take possession in the name of the city in three days.

The step was taken after consultation with City Solicitor Pattee and Francis L. Hayes, Esq.

The Mayor has not yet made public his future intention, but he will present all the facts to the City Council on Monday evening. It is his intention, however, to rush the building to completion.

The Ledger Contest.

Another week of the popularity contest is drawing to a close, and the interest increases each day. The first five last Friday were the first five yesterday, but none occupy the same position as then. Miss Leary has dropped from first to second place, and Mr. Tirrell from second to third. Miss McGovern, who was number three, is now number one. Mr. Foy and Mr. Bowditch have exchanged fourth and fifth position.

The standing of the candidates having over 100 votes at 8 A. M. Friday was:

A Sunday School Pupil, 1821.

We are pleased to learn that there is still living, a lady who was a pupil in the Episcopal Sunday School in 1821. This is Mrs. Caroline B. Newcomb, of Quincy Point. Her teacher was Miss Caroline Harrod, a very beautiful young lady, and a cousin of Miss Elizabeth Adams of Quincy. The Sunday School was held in the morning, after which, teachers and pupils walked together down to the Unitarian church, where church services were held.

Mr. Wilde Renominated.

The Republicans of the various wards of the city completed their work Thursday evening, of electing delegates to the convention to nominate a candidate for Councilman at large. There was no contest for the position, it being conceded by all that the nomination belonged to Ward Six, and to ex-Councilman Wilde who failed of an election because of a tie vote.

The caucuses and conventions were therefore merely matter of form. Ward Six held its caucus Tuesday evening, Ward Four Wednesday evening, and the other wards Thursday evening.

At 8.30 P. M., a convention of the delegates was held in the Ward room, City hall. John F. Merrill was chosen chairman and A. W. Newcomb, secretary.

The committee on credentials reported 35 delegates present, representing every ward.

It was voted to make the nomination by acclamation, and upon motion of Daniel McGrath of Ward Six, Roger H. Wilde was unanimously nominated by a rising vote.

Chairman Merrill urged the delegates and especially the Ward committee to strive to get out a full vote, as though a full ticket was to be elected.

The convention then dissolved.

Supper and Entertainment.

One of those delightful suppers spread by Universalist ladies was enjoyed by a large number in the vestry Wednesday evening.

And a still larger number attended the entertainment which was furnished mostly by Braintree talent. There were solos by Miss Lizzie Hollenback, contralto; Miss Georgie Hollenback, soprano; Mr. J. Harvey Page, baritone; duetts by the Misses Hollenback, and Messrs. Nye and Page; piano solos by Miss Grace Pettengill, and readings by Miss Lora Simonds, a young lady with considerable promise.

The whole concluded with an amusing parlor comedy entitled Mixed Pickles, in which seven young ladies from Braintree took part.

Emma Abbott.

This famous singer who died of pneumonia in Utah recently, accumulated a fortune of $3,000,000 with her voice and methods; half of which will go to endow a charitable institution for the benefit of musical and theatrical people, and the remainder to her brothers and sisters. Miss Abbott was always a great favorite with those who knew her personally, and her last act of kindness probably hastened her death. It is said that she drove out in a pouring rain, to sing, "The Last Rose of Summer," for a dying consumptive who had requested it. Her remains are to be cremated, and her ashes laid beside her husband at Gloucester.

We learn that Mayor Fairbanks is giving considerable time to straightening out the Willard schoolhouse matter. He could not turn his attention in a better direction at present. If he can only succeed in pushing the completion of the building he will make himself popular, not only in West Quincy, but will prove that the confidence of the voters was not misplaced.

THE Woburn City Press Co. will commence the publication of a daily today, which will be the first daily in our twin city. We wish it success; it will be found to be an uphill job at the start, but Woburn people should recognize it to be a necessity and go out of their way to assist it.

MAJ.-GEN. B. F. BUTLER.

He will Return to the South for the First Time Since the War.

It seems hardly necessary to say anything of the history of Gen. B. F. Butler. No man in the whole nation has been more constantly in the pulic eye for the last four decades than he. As a successful lawyer and influential politician before the war, as a patriot who was among the first to respond to the country's call at the firing upon Fort Sumter, as the man who gave New Orleans the best government the city ever had, as Commander of the Army of the James, as a Representative in Congress and a leading politician since the war, he has had public attention constantly focused upon him. No man in the country has received more praise and more abuse than he, and no man has more warm, personal friends and admirers. Many of the people of the South have been particularly bitter against him, and have tried to make his name the synonym for all that was detestable. He is now about to return good for evil, and heap coals of fire upon the heads of his detractors by a great enterprise to help restore prosperity to the region which suffered so severely from the ravages of the war. He is at the head of the great Georgia-Alabama Investment and Development Co., whose advertisement appears elsewhere in this paper, which is made up of capitalists whom he has associated with himself in a scheme to rebuild and develop large portions of Dixie. Early next month he intends to make a tour of the South, visiting that section for the first time since the close of the war—twenty-six years ago. He will go to New Orleans, and to all other prominent points, and survey the field of operations of this company carefully, to inform himself personally as to the possibilities of each locality. There is something phenominal in such a tour by a General whose first visit was sword in hand, but who now goes as a restorer. It will be watched with great interest by all sections of the country.—National Tribune, Washington, D. C.

First Quarter, Jan. 17th, 1.18 A. M.

Gov. Russell's suggestion to establish some uniform and accurate system of counting and canvassing the votes cast in an election, is a step in the right direction. Many were in hopes that recent vote in Quincy for Messrs. Wilde and Green would be carried to the Supreme Court, that it might pass judgment as to what marks should be counted. As the Governor says such a system could make the accuracy of the first count so certain as to obviate or restrict the necessity of any recount.

Our representatives in the Legislature have all been placed on very appropriate committees where they can make themselves useful. Senator Eaton, who was Selectman of Quincy for many years is chairman of the joint standing Committee on Towns, and second on the Committee on Prisons. Representative Quincy will be at home on the house Committee on Rules, and on the standing Committee on Cities, and he is also a monitor in the first division. Representative Burke who has served two years on the City Council Committee on Water, will be a valuable man this year on the Legislative committee on Water Supply, to whom the Quincy petition will be referred. Representative Bicknell is a member of the Committee on Public Charitable Institutions.

Another recommendation of the Governor to which we say amen is that giving cities greater powers, or rather not limiting them so much by laws. The inaugural commends to the Legislature the subject of enlarging the powers by general laws, especially in matters of taxation, franchises, municipal control of municipal work, and ownership of instrumentalities for its performance. Mr. Russell truly says the exercise of such powers can well be left as a question of expediency for each community to determine for itself. It should not be necessary for Quincy to apply for a special act to establish a sewerage system, or water works, or an electric light works. Rather submit it to the vote of the people.

Anything bearing on the purchase of water works by cities and litigation over the same is of interest to Quincy people at this time. Portsmouth, N. H., is having trouble, as the following dispatch explains:

"Something of a fight is in prospect in the Legislature, now in session, over the completion of the purchase of the works and franchise of the Portsmouth Aqueduct Company by the city. Last fall the city council voted to purchase the works at $150,000. This was only accomplished after a bitter fight in the city councils, notwithstanding the fact that over 2,000 taxpayers had signed petitions in favor of the purchase. The purchase was fought by such prominent men and heavy taxpayers as Frank Jones, E. H. Winchester, Col. Charles A. Sinclair and others. While all these men are in favor of the city owning its own water works, they object to paying $150,000 for the same, considering this sum far in excess of the value of the plant. After the bill was passed authorizing the purchase, something like $10,000 was paid by the city to bind the bargain, the balance to be paid as soon as proper legislation could be securred so that the city could issue water bonds.

Monday ex-Alderman Arthur W. Walker was circulating a petition to the Legislature, remonstrating against the completion of the purchase until the supreme court, or some other proper tribunal, shall fix a just price for the works of the company. The petition is being signed by many of the heavest taxpayers of the city, and it is generally believed that the Legislature will provide for an appraisal of the property."

The wise suggestions which the Attleboro Daily News makes relative to insurance will not probably be adopted, yet if there is merit in many of the new-fangled endowment insurance associations now seeking a foothold, how much better a home association would be. It would undoubtedly show up the workings, which are now obscure. Here is the News editorial in full.

"Why would it not be a good idea for those who are putting their money so freely into the multitude of different societies to form one big home association? They would save in dues and in time and labor. They could have the same fraternal association because if it is necessary there could be as many meetings as now, the new lodge could assemble every evening.

"But seriously, would not the money now sent out of town if pooled right at home give the needed security? Of course there would not be so many to draw from in cases of death or illness but then the number of deaths would be small in a single year and the number of assessments correspondingly so. If titles are the attraction everybody could be given one who desired it.

"We assume that with most people the primal idea of insurance is protection in cases of need. The more lodge work there is connected the more it costs. If it is ritual and forms that are desired there are several permanent organizations which offer them in attractive and beneficial ways, into some of which every reputable person would be welcomed. In Germany the idea is being discussed of the government insuring, receiving the dues and paying the benefits. We doubt that idea gaining acceptance in this country but something must be done to counteract the multitude of money catching schemes masquerading under the cloak of benevolent ideas."

The Herald correspondent woefully misjudges the people of Quincy when he says Quincy is indignant at the forced resignation of Commissioner Alexander. They are indignant at the administration of 1890 for not having removed him sooner. Mayor Fairbanks owes his election solely to the promise to make a change in the office of commissioner of public works, and the only wonder is that the present official did not swamp the Republican party. We are not aware whether Mayor Fairbanks requested the resignation of Commissioner Alexander or not, the correspondence shows the latter to have taken the initiative, and that within twenty-four hours after the inauguration. Undoubtedly the new Mayor is pleased that Commissioner Alexander should have tendered his resignation, as he lost no time in accepting it.

We have before commended the appointment of ex-Councilman Ewell as Commissioner, and still believe he will fill the position better than either of his predecessors. We are assured further by the Mayor, that the position was not promised to Mr. Ewell either directly or indirectly, and all this talk about "City Hall ring" is imagination if not malice.

It would not be becoming to criticise Commissioner Alexander's course very much as he will be with us but a short time but the delay in beginning the rebuilding of Hancock street and the failure to discontinue work when frost came, were alone condemnatory. Then we are told that the appropriation will fall far short of finishing the job, which is not a first class one either.

Installation of Officers.

The officers or Local Branch of the Order of the Iron Hall were duly installed on Tuesday evening by the Supreme District Deputy Justice, E. R. Young of Boston, assisted by Past Chief Justice, G. W. Prescott of this city. After the installation the District Deputy made some remarks concerning the order, and the work of the order in the various branches. He said the Iron Hall had 53,000 members, and cash assets of over $1,000,000; and all claims paid, and were able to stand, even if many of the other benefit associations should go under. He said the life insurance companies were endeavoring to impress the public against these associations, and were paying publishers of newspapers in Boston freely for publishing articles against benefit associations.

Mr. Young was formerly a resident of Quincy, a boot-maker by trade, and boarded with Mr. Charles P. Tirrell. But it was some years ago, and there were many new comers in the city,—in fact, among the members present he did not recognize but one whom he knew at that time.

He was much pleased to see the lodge in such excellent condition, and to learn that new and worthy members were being added.

One new member was initiated on Tuesday evening and several applications were handed in. The branch has a reserve fund of $500 deposited in the Co-operative and Savings banks in this city, and an excellent board of trustees to look after its property.

The City Report.

The Monitor is about right in the following suggestions. It says:

"In no feature of the business of the city can there be seen so marked a distinction between the city and town government as in the auditor's report.

"Under the town form, this document was valuable for reference, and to those who preserved them they are a history of the town. It contained a record of the births, deaths and marriages; the names of the delinquent taxpayers, the proceedings of town meetings and the votes for the several officers who were up for election. None of these items were in the city auditor's report for 1890.

"Why they were omitted we cannot understand. It may be on the ground of economy, but there are many pages of the essays in the last part of the report that could be left out to make room for the items mentioned above. We venture to say that the old-fashioned report would give more satisfaction to a large majority of the citizens of Quincy, than the elaborate report of 1889.

"We make this suggestion to the Auditor, and if he adopts it, he will receive the thanks of the citizens at large, without distinction of party."

Quincy Should be Proud.

The Quincy LEDGER has started a voting contest for the most popular wage-earner in Quincy, Weymouth, Milton or Braintree. We wish the little daily success in its contest, and hope that the managers will meet with the ultimate success in establishing their enterprise upon a firm and paying foundation which they deserve. Certainly Quincy, as the only city of Norfolk county, should be proud enough of its position to support a daily paper, for a city without its daily, is as much an anomaly as a church edifice without its steeple.—Weymouth Gazette.

☞ The Executive Committee of the Massachusetts Press Association have decided to hold the annual reunion and banquet in Boston on Tuesday, Feb. 10th.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., Jan. 14, 1891.

"Make haste slowly," was the motto of the presiding officers of the legislature in deciding upon the committees. Gov. Russell had recommended changes in the commissions, in the control of streets by municipal corporations and in other unusual matters. No committee was constituted to handle these subjects, and the question was whether a special committee should be selected or whether the matters should be distributed among other committees as well as possible. So the committees were not announced till Tuesday. Then it appeared that a special committee had been created to consider the matter of commissions, while the other new matters had been distributed among the old committees.

President Sprague has divided the senate committee positions as fairly as possible between the two parties, considering that there are 20 republicans in the senate and 20 democrats. There are six senate standing committees and 32 joint standing committees, and each party gets just half of the chairmen. Senator Pinkerton of Worcester is chairman of the senate judiciary, and Senator Bennett of Suffolk of the railroad committee. Both are republicans and these are the two most sought chairmanship, But there was no better way to allot the places. Generally there seems to be satisfaction with the distribution, and now the legislature is nearly ready for work.

Privately among the members of the house there is kicking against a new rule which was adopted at the close of last year's session and has been adopted this year with the mass of other rules. It is that every petition and order, as soon as it is introduced, must be referred to the committee on rules and that committee must report within a week what disposal shall be made of it. Such a rule is most ridiculous. All committees are appointed for winnowing the matter presented and for deciding which of them are worthy bases of legislation. But this rule implies that the committee on rules knows more than all the remainder of the house put together. It also tends to the delay of business, for every matter must be passed upon by this omniscient committee before it can go to any other committee and there is opportunity for procrastination on every matter and contest on every report from the committee. The whole matter illustrates the growing tendency to red tape and it is a wonder that the house endures it at all.

But the opposition to the new rule, and the manifest impossibility of its successful operation led to a complete change of front on the part of the committee on rules at an early a date as Wednesday. The committe reported unanimously as a substitute for the obnoxious rule, a measure by which all power of the committee over the final disposal of orders and petitions was removed, and the committees was restricted to little more than clerial functions over the form of documents. All their action is to occur before the documents are presented to the house, and thus the expensive duplication of matters in the journal is prevented.

The lobby are very slow in registering. In the first few days of the session none of the regular third house had put themselves on record with the exception of "Ben" Cook of Fall River, who is the regular agent of the manufactorers' association of cotton and woolen mills, which has habitually kept a man at the state house to watch, especially for the labor legislation. Joe Sargent of Lowell, used to be their man, but he died over a year ago, and Cook is his successor. But he is not in the same class exactly, as some others, and the latter are still shy of the state house.

Under the new law that certain matters for legislation must be filed in the secretary of state's office before Jan. 1, or be referred, unheard, to the next legislative, three have already thus been put over to next year, the petition for the incoporation of Beverly Farms and two petitions for leave to build a ship canal across Cape Cod. Notice of the petitions had been filed, as was formerly required, but not the documents themselves.

Some of the old subjects for legislation have come up again, this time with apparently more hope of passage in consequence of their indorsement by the governor in his message. Among them are the matters of abolishing fines for imperfect weaving and of shortening the hours of labor for women and minors in manufacturing and mechanical establishments, besides giving all employes in such establishments a Saturday half holiday. Propositions have also been put in to change the liquor license law, both as regards the price of the licenses and the limitation by number of population.

Wednesday afternoon a conference of House Republicans was held to decide what should be done with a pending resolution by Mr. Quincy of Quincy, a leading Democrat, urging Massachusetts men in Congress to oppose free coinage silver legislation. Quite a debate occurred as to the sound policy of the party on such resolutions. Mr. Wardwell of Haverhill was opposed to all of them, but Speaker Bennett and most of the members thought otherwise and it was decided to offer substitute resolutions and to prevent the Republicans from being robbed of party capital by the Democrats. Messrs. Wardwell of Haverhill, Sohier of Beverly, Murray of Fitchburg, Tuttle of Arlington and Bliss of Boston were made the conference committee on matters of this sort; Mr. Kimball of Fitchburg presided at the conference.

Senator Eaton of the first Norfolk senatorial district has the championship of the committee on towns and second place on the prison committee. The representatives from the fifth Norfolk representave district are provided for as follows: Mr. Quincy of Quincy—fourth place on the committee on rules, fourth place on the committee on cities and a monitorship, which means that he is to be the democrat in the first division who counts votes; Mr. Burke of Quincy—has place on the committee on water supply; Mr. Bicknell of Weymouth —seventh place on the committee on public charitable institutions. How Watson got a Pension.

Moses Stearns and C. T. Littlefield, two forlorn-looking individuals of about 50 years of age, pleaded guilty to perjury in the U. S. district court Thursday morning, and Judge Carpenter sent them to Cambridge jail for three months each. One night last winter Stearns and Littlefield wandered into a liquor saloon on North street. A man named Watson was there. Watson was buying liquor pretty freely and soon excited the interest and affection of the two men. The result was that Stearns and Littlefield got pretty drunk, and when Watson wanted them to identify him on his application for a Mexican War pension they did not hesitate in swearing that they had known Watson for 35 and 40 years respectively. Watson, who had drawn seven different Mexican War pensions under seven different aliases, claiming service on the ship Savannah in each case, was arrested and is serving a seven years' sentence in state prison. He was an inmate of the Quincy Soldiers' Home.—Record.

Essay on Alcohol.

Dr. R. McLennan delivered an essay on alcohol at the meeting of the Clan McGregor literary association on Saturday night. Mr. Copland presiding.

In the 'good old days' when a disciple of Esculapius gave a diagnosis of anything, mankind sat listening at his feet untainted with the heresy of unbelief. He knew all the ills that flesh is heir to. In extracting a corn or charming the toothache—the hell of a' diseases, he was equally successful. In our degenerate day, all men, from the least even to the greatest, are criticised. "Prove all things" seems to be the motto. Our genial doctor passed the ordeal well. It is the unanimous opinion of the members that his paper is a thoughtful and scholarly production.

After describing the process of fermentation by which alcohol and all distilled spirits is obtained; the effect of alcohol on the stomach, the liver, the heart, the nervous system, &c., the doctor went on to say: "If I were asked which drug comes first in usefulness to mankind, I would say opium, with all its different preparations. Next in importance I would class the various preparations of alcohol. Stated briefly, brandy, whiskey and so called spirits are for acute diseases, the wines for convalescents, and the fermented liquors, beer, ale and porter, for long continued and wasting diseases.

These few lines on the use of alcohol I have written knowing that there is a prejudice against its use at any time. Those who would describe it as a curse and not a blessing to mankind, must have studied little of its effect on the heart exhausted by pathological changes and have inferred, not from the use but from the abuse of it.

Alcoholism is a term applied to the pathology and symptoms following the ingestion of large quantities of alcohol. Both may be either acute or chronic, as in the case of the drunkard and the habitual toper. In the acute, large quantities are taken at one time or at short intervals. Alcohol being very diffusible, its effect follows rapidly. The circulation takes on greater activity. The brain being over stimulated, thoughts arise with great rapidity, giving a general confusion of ideas. If continued for many hours it may end in a suspension of the functions of the cerebrum, coma.

After a few hours this condition of sleep passes away and a state of nausea and loathing for food comes on, owing to the acute congestion of the stomach. If the stomach be empty and the system fatigued, as in a prolonged exposure to cold, so rapidly will the alcohol be absorbed and carried to the brain that a condition of coma or very deep sleep follows immediately. This has often resulted in death by freezing.

If the stomach contains a quantity of food, its albumen would be coagulated and hardened and digestion arrested, absorption of the alcohol slower, its secondary effect on the brain less marked, the stomach in a more irritable condition and vomiting and nausea follow. The stimulation having drawn much on the reserve force of the organism, a corresponding depression follows until the balance is restored. The organism under the effects of alcohol is all excitement, after the effects have passed away, languidness. Gaiety has given place to melancholia. The jollification which lasted a short time is dearly bought. Truly the drundard's life is not to be envied, and would scarcely be tolerated by a sound mind.

Perhaps the largest amount of alcohol is ingested by those who have never been in a state of intoxication, or those who have never been drunk but once in their lives, and that once was all the time—the so called toper.

There are secret drinkers, never known to be intoxicated, perhaps not even suspected of imbibing until discovered by accident. Take as an illustration: A steamer leaves London for New York. She has aboard many lives in the various grades of social standing. After a few days of splendid sail they encounter a storm. By this time perhaps the supply of good things which could only be taken in a limited amount has come to an end. Great hardship is endured. The ship is tossed about by the fury of the waves. A condition known as sea-sickness comes on. Here the irritability of the stomach is very conspicuous. It refuses to retain any food. While all aboard unaccustomed to such privations are uncomfortably affected, it is seen that some of the more robust looking ones are more seriously affected. The old topers begin to show up. The stomach being unable to retain food—the heart and brain so accustomed to stimulation—is unable to perform its functions, so delicate and so variable, that a condition of wild delirium ensues, bringing them to the verge of great danger in parting with their lives. Those, on the other hand who are not accustomed to stimulants love the voyage well. Again the physician is often called in to treat a man in his estimation of good physical stay. The patient is about forty years old and suffering from pneumonia, say of the croupous variety. One would expect that he could at this age hold out against such sickness, and that in due time the sickness though grave, would end in resolution. To the surprise of the physician he finds that hourly the patient is getting worse, and that the battle between life and disease is going to end in the defeat of the former. I believe, gentlemen, the explanation of many such cases is the secret use of alcohol.

Mr. McLennan then spoke of the effect on a person's appearance, their lack of power to resist disease, or undergo surgical operations, convincing his hearers that man is deteriorated by the habitual imbibition of alcohol. Much insanity was caused by alcohol.

When the doctor finished, the Rev. D. M. Wilson, honorable president of the Society, ascended the platform; and it being his first appearance in this capacity, a most cordial reception was accorded him. The reverend gentlemen acknowledged in graceful terms; and in the course of his remarks expressed the pleasure it afforded him to co-operate with an association of this kind, so well calculated to confer benefits on its members.

Several members criticised the essay. The majority agreed with the views propounded. A section, however, while generally in accord with the doctor, thought that prohibition is the only panacea. A few expressed the opinion that a man, weak and weary and worn, after a hard day's toil, would be much benefited by a "we drap'" of whiskey today to inspire flagging vitality. This heresy was exposed and extinguished by the reverend gentleman. Dr. McLennan replied to the various criticisms to the satisfaction of all—save, perhaps, the prohibitionists.

John H. O'Brien, of Cohasset for giving a false alarm of fire at Cohasset, Jan. 9, was found guilty and fined $20.

Charles Anderson for being a tramp at Quincy was sent to the State Farm at Bridgwater for eight months.

James Sargeant of Milton was arraigned on four counts, charging him with stealing hens at Milton. The defendant waved the reading and examination and was ordered to recognize in the sum of $300 on each count for his appearance at the Superior Criminal Court to be held at Dedham the first Monday in April. Being unable to furnish bonds he was committed. Sargeant was then taken to Bussell's where his picture was taken, which will ornament the rogue's gallery.

August Detournio, of West Quincy, whose case for keeping a liquor nuisance was continued until Saturday, came into court Tuesday and retracted his plea of not guilty and plead guilty and was fined $50 which he paid.

John Lynch and Thomas Wilson of Weymouth, for drunk, $8 each; in default committed.

Holbrook has furnished several cases in court, all the result of quarrels among neighbors.

The first warrant was brought by Mrs. Mary L. Wentworth, who charged Mrs. Ellen Bramley with using profane and insulting language. After hearing the evidence, the defendant was found not guilty and discharged

Mrs. Bramley then brought a charge against Mrs. Wentworth for using profane and insulting language. She was found not guilty and discharged.

Case number three was brought by Mrs. Wentworth, who charged Bernard E. Crooker with using profane and insulting language. In this case, as in the previous two, his Honor found the defendant not guilty and he was discharged.

Elected to a Responsible Position.

John Q. McDonnell of the firm of McDonnell & Sons of this city, who four years ago took up his residence in Buffalo, N. Y., was on the 9th inst. elected vice-president of a new national bank, the Union, which will begin business April 1. As the business of Hon. Joshua S. Bliss takes him from the city much of the time, Mr. McDonnell will virtually be the president. Our former townsman stands high among the business and financial circles of that city, where his firm has established a granite yard.

Natick is fortunate. The will of the late Mary Ann Morse of Natick leaves an estate valued at $150,000 for the purpose of erecting, establishing and maintaining a hospital in that town.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. Life's Onward Current.

Forever onward is the march—
From beastly hoof to hand—
From savage to the seer and sage—
From saurian types to man;
From man to angel—limitless
As are the starry spheres—
Progression hath not halt nor bound
In God's eternal years!

From darkest cloud the lightning flash,
From nothing—life Divine,
From gloom to glory is the law,
The unvarying design.
A world of good invites our eyes,
And charms the willing mind—
But he who only misery finds
Blasphemes the life Divine.

No treacherous gift was life to man,
With deadly hate concealed,
For Love Divine the method planned,
And all will be revealed
When o'er the clouds that hover here
The risen soul surveys
The mansions of the eternal spheres,
The land of endless days.

Boston Theatres.

Boston.

Monday commences the second and last week of the "Crystal Slipper" at the Boston Theatre. The music has been changed and much improved since its last presentation in Boston two years ago. It is the most brilliant of brilliant spectacular plays and has three grand ballets.

Boston Museum.

"The Solicitor" bids fair to have a long run at the Museum as patrons are so pleased with the comedy that once seeing it does not satisfy them. "Betty's Finish," the curtain raiser, is a jolly one-act comedy in which the popular Miss O'Leary is most delightful, calling forth warm applause. Both plays are full of fun and for a good laugh the Museum is the place to go.

Hollis Street.

Following "A Straight Tip" at the Hollis, next Monday comes "Dr. Bill" the Madison Square Garden Theatre success. The engagement is limited to one week which is a very short time in which to test "Dr. Bill's" remedies. Many well-known artists are to take part in the performance, namely, Wilton Lackaye, J. W. Jennings, J. B. Polk, Isabelle Evesson, formerly of Boston Museum, Sadie Martinot and Louise Allen.

Tremont.

Manager A. M. Palmer's Home Company, from the Madison Square Theatre, by special arrangement with Messrs. Abbey & Schoeffel, will play in Boston, at the Tremont, beginning Monday next, Jan. 19. For the first week the successful "A Pair of Spectacles" and "Afterthoughts" will be given; in the latter Agnes Booth having a role allowing of another of her incomparably fine assumptions. The comedy of "A Pair of Spectacles" is by the well-known author, Sidney Grundy, Esq., and has been a reigning New York attraction, delighting large audiences, being bright and very amusing. The original one-act play, "Afterthoughts," will begin the performance, and is a very lovely play, in which Agnes Booth has made an impression which created unbounded approval, the impersonation being ranked with her long-to-be-remembered assumption in "Old Love Letters."

World's Fair Proclamation.

The following proclamation has been issued by the President of the United States of America:

Whereas, satisfactory proof has been presented to me that provision has been made for adequate grounds and buildings for the uses of the World's Columbian Exposition, and that a sum not less than $10,000,000, to be used and expended for the purposes of said exposition, has been provided, in accordance with the conditions and requirements of Section 10 of an act entitled "An act to provide for celebrating the four hundreth anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, by holding an international exhibition of arts, industries, manufactures and the products of the soil, mine and sea, in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois," approved April 25, 1890.

Now, therefore, I, Benjamin Harrison, President of the United States, by virtue of the authority vested in me by said act, I do hereby declare and proclaim that such international exhibition will be opened on the first day of May, in the year eighteen hundred and ninety-three, in the city of Chicago, in the state of Illinois, and will not be closed before the last Thursday in October of the same year.

And in the name of the government and of the people of the United States, I do hereby invite all the nations of the earth to take part in the commemoration of an event that is pre-eminent in human history and of lasting interest to mankind, by appointing representatives thereto, and sending such exhibits to the World's Columbian Exposition as will fitly and fully illustrate their resources, their industries and their progress in civilization.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this twenty-fourth day of December, one thousand eight hundred and ninety, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and fifteenth.

BENJAMIN HARRISON.

By the President:

JAMES G. BLAINE,
Secretary of State.

The Value and use of Money.

Young people of both sexes should early be taught the use of money, and to rightly know its value they should be given ways of earning it, to spend, within reasonable limits, as they chose. Much of the work which even little children do in the shape of chores around the house ought to be paid for, as perhaps a better way of getting money into a child's hand than any other. It is very demoralizing to beg, and the child that is encouraged or even allowed to get its spending money in this way, is surely laying up a poor foundation for after life. On the farm the means for earning money should as much as possible be based on farm operations. When the boys see in their own pockets some of the money made by farming they will take more interest in their daily work. Unless parents who are farmers desire to discourage their sons from following this business, they should be allowed to do something each year on their own account, and have the money they thus make. The little thus earned early by themselves will be worth a hundred times as much as if left to them after the death of their parents, who had previously kept them ignorant of any practical knowledge of the value of money and its uses.

An Odd Occurrence.

One night a young woman who is somewhat dependent upon her eye-glasses to get her through the world without groping, took a Madison avenue horse-car out to Seventy-eighth street. When she reached her destination her glasses were gone. Nearly three hours later she took a Madison avenue car back down town. As she stepped on to the platform something glistening caught her eye. She bent over. The thing looked like a pair of glasses. She picked them up. They were glasses—and they were her very own, unbroken, save for the cord that had let them fall from her neck. The car was evidently the same one in which she had come out, and it had made one or two long trips since then, down to the post-office and back. Yet the glasses had lain there on the rear platform, with all the passengers stepping in and out, waiting for just herself to come and pick them up.—New York Evening Sun.

Vermont's Treasure.

It seems from a recently published U. S. Census bulletin that while twelve states furnish marble, Vermont supplies more than all the other states combined.

There are now 103 quarries in operation and the total value of the annual output is $3,488,000. Of this amount Vermont produced $2,169,580 and Massachusetts $85,000. Of the capital employed, $8,346,938 is in Vermont; $1,379,628 is in Georgia and $1,036,461 in New York. The average wages of quarrymen and millmen are stated to be $1.26 a day; mechanics, $1.98; laborers $1.28; foremen, $2 37. The value of the importations of marble during the calendar year, 1889, was $701,518; in 1888, $534,163; in 1887, $529,933. Vermont's dairies have long been her pride and her richness in marble is also worthy of note.

"Copy" in 1891.

There were papers
And scissors,
And pencils galore.
And an editor too, overlooking the store.
And an angel, unseen, that was keeping the score,

"Here's a squib on the tariff, in tersest of prose,
Just my views—so, of course, in the paper it goes.
And an item from Brown,
Of improvements 'bout town;
And base ball?—yes a corner,
But not till you'd think
That for most of our readers
'Twas victuals and drink.

What! A prize fight?
No, no!
Where's my blue pencil? Quick!
Not an 'em' of that matter shall go in the 'stick.'
'A saloon and a murder?
Yes, put in a line
Making plain the connection 'tween cause and the crime
And the rest of the secret the reporter wrought out,
Into waste basket 'pi' shall be made without doubt.

Here's a Christian Convention, and type written, too,
On one side of the paper, as Christians should do.
Not too long—bright and pithy, and full of the glow,
That enkindles each one who shall read it, you know—
Not a scissoring, there!
And this story forsooth,
Such as boys like to read,
Is yet strong in its truth,
And nerves one to actions of valor and love
Of the kind are reported to journals above

Said the editor, slowly,—
"'Tis something to think
That the man who is standing on misery's brink,
That the lad or the maid on the threshold of life,
That the pure heart of sister, and mother and wife,
May be cursed or be blessed as the types shall reveal
Deeds of good or of ill, things of woe or of weal.
And, God helping me"—aye, and the words were a prayer—
I will "justify" copy with wisdom and care.

The Dominie Didn't Sing It.

There is a big Baptist church, colored, out in the northwestern part of the city. A man standing at the intersection of Vermont avenue and T street might hit it with a stone without over exerting himself. The pastor of that church is a good deal of a vocalist, and nothing pleases his congregation more than his excellent rendition of gospel hymns. There was a meeting in that church one evening, and everything was moving along very pleasantly when the pastor said: "Now, we are going to take up a collection, and if the amount donated is satisfactorily large I will sing for you—sing anything you ask for."

The congregation then shelled out its contribution. It must have been "satisfactorily large," for the pastor stepped to the front and said: "I'll sing now. What shall it be? Express your preferences."

"Annie Rooney," said somebody in one of the rear seats, and the preacher's wrath was momentarily shrouded in a burst of laughter.

"I'll 'Annie Rooney' you," shouted the offended shepherd, but the joker had departed with sensible alacrity.—Washington Star.

Johnny on Miracles.

Little Johnny Jordan was a passenger on a suburban train. Beside him sat a tall, solemn-looking man with side-whiskers. In front was Johnny's pa and ma, and behind, his Aunt Hetty. The whole party had been to church, and the man sitting beside Johnny was the minister going out to spend the afternoon with the Jordans.

"My little man," said the minister to Johnny, "did you pay close attenteon to the sermon?"

"Yes, sir."

"Do you remember that I said something about miracles?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, Johnny, do you know what a miracle is?"

"Yes, sir."

"Tell me, please."

"Well, all I know about it is ma said this morning it would be a miracle if we could go to church once without havin' the minister taggin' home with us to dinner. So I guess this hain't no mir—"

"Johnny Jordan! (from the front seat) Will you come here this minute?"

"Yes'm."

Sheriff's Sale.

NORFOLK, ss. December 20, 1890.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of Benjamin Johnson, of said Quincy, recovered against John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, of Quincy, at the Superior Court or this County, I have taken all the right that John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, had on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1890, that being the date the same was attached on mesne process, to a certain real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows:

A certain lot of land on West street, in said Quincy bounded northwesterly on West street thirty-five (35) feet; northeasterly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask one hundred and seventy (170) feet; southeasterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale two hundred (200) feet, as the stone wall runs; southwesterly on land now or late of John Wolfe two hundred and fifty (250) feet. Being a part of the premises conveyed to Edward V. Trask by deed of Charles H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 500, fol. 556, and by said Trask conveyed to John Reichart, by deed dated Feb. 2, 1888.

Also I have taken all the right in equity that John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, had on the 25th day of September. A. D. 1890, to redeem a certain mortgaged real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows, viz: Northerly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask ninety-five (95) feet; easterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale eighty-eight (88) feet; southerly on land of the same and of the said Edward V. Trask fifty-eight (58) feet, the angle of the easterly and southerly bound being marked by a birch tree; westerly on land now or late of said Trask one hundred and fifty (150) feet. The above described land being a part of the premises conveyed to said Trask by deed of C. H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 550, fol. 556, and by him conveyed to John Reichart by deed dated March 16, 1886, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 579, fol. 230.

Said last mentioned and described lot of land being the same described in a mortgage deed thereof from John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, to Joseph H. Vogel for eight hundred dollars, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds for said County, lib. 579, fol. 231, also in the mortgage deed thereof from John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, to E. H. Doble et al. for two hundred dollars, and recorded in the said Registry of Deeds, lib. 601, fol. 344, and on the 30th day of January next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence off Franklin street in said Quincy, I shall offer for sale to the highest bidder, at public auction, all your right and title in and to said first described and bounded lot of land, and also at the same time the aforesaid right in equity of redemption, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

Deputy Sheriff.

A Boy's Mother.

My mother she's so good to me,
Ef I was good as I could be,
I couldn't be as good. No, sir!
Can't any boy be as good as her!

She loves me when I'm glad er mad;
She loves me when I'm good er bad;
An', what's the funniest thing, she says
She loves me when she punishes.

I don't like her to punish me;
That don't hurt, but it hurts to see
Her cryin'; nen I cry; an' nen
We both cry; an' be good again.

She loves me when she cuts and sews
My little cloak and Sunday clothes;
An' when my pa comes home to tea,
She loves him 'most as much as me.

She laughs an' tells him all I said,
An' grabs me up an' pats my head;
An' I hug her an' hug my pa,
An' love him purt' nigh much as ma.

Miscellany.

The Romance of a Dish-Towel.

BY ANNA MORRIS.

"How happens it, Tom, that you never married?" asked Harry Stanhope of his friend Tom Meredith, as the two sauntered slowly along Broadway one fine spring afternoon.

"Because I never could find any woman that would have me, I suppose," answered Tom laughingly.

"No use to tell me that, old fellow," rejoined Harry. "Girls are not so foolish as to decline taking a good-looking man like you, with plenty of money; yet here you are, nearly thirty year old, and no more prospect of settling than you had ten years ago. Now, if it were me, why the case is different. A doctor, just struggling into practice, is scarcely considered 'eligible' by the match-making mammas, to say nothing of their worldly-wise daughters; but they are all ready and eager to smile upon you and you might as well make your choice."

"Thank you," answered Tom, still laughing. "When I find a young lady who can come up to my grandmother's standard of domestic virtues, I will invite her to become Mrs. Thomas Meredith."

"And what was your grandmother's peculiar doctrine on the subject?" inquired Harry.

"I presume she had more than one," said Tom, "but this she particularly impressed upon my mind. 'Always look at a woman's dish-towels,' she would remark with much solemnity. 'No matter how well she plays the piano, or sings, or how many languages she can speak, never marry her, unless you see that she uses soft dry towels, and plenty of them, when she wipes dishes! Be sure that a girl who uses soiled or wet dish-towels does not know enough to be the wife of any honest man."

Harry laughed at this definition of housewifely knowledge, but presently said in a serious tone:—

"There is considerable truth in the old lady's ideas after all, but I don't quite understand how, in these days, you can apply the test; most young ladies that we know, have perhaps never seen a dish-towel. Now I think of it, I promised to introduce you to my cousins. There are three of them, all bright, pretty girls, though I think it doubtful whether they would fulfil your grandmother's requirements as a wife. Still, you may find them pleasant acquaintances, and if you like I will go there with you now."

"Agreed," responded Tom, and the two friends soon found themselves in the parlor of Mrs. Renshaw, Harry's aunt.

The young ladies were all at home, and, as Harry had said, were bright, pretty girls. Ida, the eldest, was a tall, queenly brunette, whose magnificent dark eyes and abundant raven tresses seemed to compel universal admiration, though she had a powerful rival in Adele, the second daughter, whose delicate blonde beauty showed to fresh advantage beside her more brilliant sister. The two were acknowledged belles in their own circle, and few, who knew them, ever paused to give a second glance at their youngest sister—little Violet. As shy and shrinking as her floral namesake, she avoided the gay assemblages in which her sisters loved to shine, and passed her hours pleasantly and peacefully with her books, her music and her flowers. She was not present when Harry and his friend entered; but when her cousin, with whom she seemed a great favorite, asked expressly for her, Miss Adele carelessly desired a servant to call her. Tom, who was conversing with Ida, did not notice her entrance, till aroused by Harry's voice saying:—

"Mr. Meredith, let me introduce you to my cousin, Miss Violet Renshaw."

And turning quickly he was surprised at the sight of the tiny creature, so unlike her elder sisters. There was nothing magnificent and little that could be strictly termed beautiful in the almost childish figure, but something indescribably winning in the clear, gray eyes, and in the rich chestnut curls that clustered about the broad, low brow.

Tom had little time for observation, however, as Ida and Adele claimed all his attention, while Harry monopolized Violet in a frank, brotherly way, quite unlike his formal and ceremonious manner with the elder sisters.

"Well, what do you think of my three cousins?" was Harry's natural question, when he and Tom were once more on the street.

"I can only express my admiration by saying that I wish it were possible to divide myself into three separate and distinct individuals that I might offer each of the fair enslavers a hand and heart," replied Tom with much solemnity.

"What, without even waiting to discover whether their dish-towels are in proper order?" retorted his friend.

Tom laughed.

"I have a presentiment that I shall forget my revered grandmother's advice until it is too late, when the important event of meeting my fate shall arrive."

"And then remember it for the rest of your life, I suppose," observed Harry; "on the principle of 'marrying in haste and repenting at leisure.' Well, I hope my fair cousins will not be the cause of such a catastrophe; but I must leave you here."

Left to himself, Tom sauntered slowly along, thinking of the young ladies whom he had just seen. It must be confessed that little Violet occupied but a very small portion of his thoughts, which were filled with Ida and Adele. "But I doubt if either of them ever saw a dish-towel," was his concluding reflection, as he reached his boarding-house.

Weeks passed on. Tom was devoted in his attentions to the Misses Renshaw. Rumor had assigned him first to Ida, then to Adele, and waited with impatience for the time when the engagement should be publicly announced.

Meanwhile, almost every day brought some good and sufficient excuse for him to call at Mrs. Renshaw's pleasant house; a new poem, the latest song, an invitation for a drive, or a plan for some excursion. Of Violet he saw less than of the other sisters, though they were very friendly, and he treated her with somewhat of the same brotherly frankness as Harry.

One lovely June morning he presented himself at Mrs. Renshaw's at quite an early hour, intending to invite the three sisters to pass the beautiful summer day in a long country drive.

He noticed that there was some delay in answering his ring, which was not usually the case with Mrs. Renshaw's well trained servants, but at length he heard a light footstep in the hall, and in another moment the door was opened by Violet. She had a broom in her hand, and a dusting cap covered her bright curls, but she bade him good morning with as much cordiality as usual, and inviting him enter, adding—

"Please walk into the dining-room, for I am just sweeping the parlors."

Secretly wondering, Tom obeyed. As he turned the handle of the dining-room door, there was a sudden rush, a hasty bang of a door, and a hurried exclamation of "O Violet! how could you?" and he found himself in the presence of the fair Adele, though for a moment he scarcely recognized her in the slovenly dressed girl, with disheveled hair, who stood by the breakfast table dabbling the cups and saucers in some greasy water and wiping them on a towel, which to say the least, was very far from being spotlessly clean. She colored, and with some confusion of manner said:

"Ah, good-morning, Mr. Meredith. So you have come to find us all at work this morning? It appears that we have for our three servants a brother and two sisters. They received this morning the news of their mother's dangerous illness, and mamma at once gave them all permission to go home. We supposed we could get a woman who sometimes does extra work for us, but she was engaged for the day, so we are obliged to do the best we can, ourselves. I assure you," she continued, with a little laugh which Tom before had often thought pretty and engaging, but which now sounded false and effective, "that I am by no means accustomed to such work, nor have I any desire to become so."

"Cannot you allow me to assist you?" asked Tom, politely. "I was brought up on a farm, and have often washed dishes and made myself generally useful about the kitchen."

"You!" exclaimed Adele, in such an astonished tone that Tom could not forbear laughing.

"Yes, certainly; why not?" he inquired.

"Oh, I don't know—only I thought—you never did anything," stammered Adele: then endeavoring to seem at ease, she said hurriedly, "Yes, if you will help, please take this heavy tea kettle into the kitchen, and set it on the stove."

Tom seized the kettle, and throwing open the door leading to the kitchen, was crossing the room toward the stove, when his progress was arrested by the sudden appearance of Ida from the store-room beyond. If Adele looked slovenly and disheveled, what shall be said of Ida? An old dress slippers run down at the heel and burst out at the sides, no collar or ruffle, very little hair, instead of the magnificent tresses he had so often admired, and what there was, hanging about her face, no wonder Tom started in blank astonishment.

A heavy frown took the place of the usual smile, as she curtly bade him good-morning. Tom muttered an apology for his intrusion as he deposited his burden on the stove, and turned to retrace his steps, just as Violet entered from the dining-room. She did not see him, but, addressing Ida, said:—

"Run away now, Ida dear, and dress before callers come for you. I have already sent Adele upstairs, and will finish the dishes now I have done my sweeping."

"You have been long enough about it, I hope," muttered Ida ungraciously, but nevertheless availing herself of her sister's offer with much alacrity. "Here are the dish-towels, Violet," she said extending several greasy blackened articles to the young girl.

Tom had been meditating an escape, not an easy affair, as the sisters stood directly in his path; but at the word dish-towels he involuntarily glanced around. "No wonder my grandmother cautioned me," was his first thought as the greasy articles met his sight, and he hastily approved the look of disgust which crossed Violet's face as she laid those aside, and, opening a drawer, took from it a plentiful supply, soft, dry and clean.

Ida and Adele had both disappeared, and Tom ventured to renew his offer of assistance to Violet, who started a little as she for the first time noticed his presence. But she recovered her composure at once, and quietly answered, as she deftly filled the dish-pan with clean hot suds:—

"No, thank you, Mr. Meredith. I shall do very well without assistance. My sisters have not left much for me to do. You had better walk into the parlor, and they will soon join you."

"No, indeed," replied Tom. "I will take myself out of the way, with apologies for my untimely intrusion, unless you will really let me be of some service. And believe me," he added earnestly, with an admiring glance at the neat little figure tripping so lightly about the kitchen, and mentally contrasting her with her two sisters, "you will make me very happy by allowing me to help you."

"Oh, very well, said Violet, smiling and blushing a little as she met his gaze. "If you are really so much in need of employment, I will try to provide some for you. Suppose you set these dishes on the lower shelf of the closet, as I wash them,—then I can arrange them after they are all done."

Tom obeyed, and was rewarded by being allowed to bring a hod of coal from the cellar, and do various other little errands, all the while he was noticing the neatness and despatch with which Violet worked, and was especially observant of the clean dry dish-towels, and the skill with which, when done using them, she washed and scalded and hung them up to dry.

He declined the invitation to dinner given by Mrs. Renshaw, when she came and found him assisting Violet, and made his way directly to Harry's office.

"I have made my choice at last, Harry!" he announced: "it is one that would suit even my grandmother!"

"Might I inquire who is the fortunate damsel?" asked Harry, laying down his book; "and how are you so sure of your revered relative's approval?"

Tom told his morning's experience; concluding with "If she will only accept me, I shall be the happiest man alive, and all owing to my dear old grandmother's good advice."—Ballou's Monthly Magazine.

Curing a Cold.

When one becomes chilled, or takes cold the mouths of myriads of little sweat glands are suddenly closed, and the impurities which pass off through the skin are forced back to the interior of the body, vitiating the blood, and putting extra work on the lungs and other internal organs.

Just beneath the surface of the skin, all over the body, there is a net-work of minute blood vessels, finer than the finest lace. When one is chilled the blood is forced from these capillary vessels into one or more of the internal organs, producing inflammation or congestion, and thus often causing diseases dangerous to life.

The time to treat a cold is at the earliest possible moment after you have taken it, and your prime object should be to restore the perspiration and the capillary circulation.

As soon, then as you feel that you have taken cold, have a good fire in your bedroom. Put your feet into water as hot as can be borne, and containing a tablespoonful of mustard. Have it in a vessel so deep that the water will come up well toward the knees. Throw a blanket, over the whole to prevent rapid evaporation and cooling. In from five to ten minutes take the feet out, wipe them dry, and get into a bed on which there are two extra blankets.

Just before or after getting into bed, drink a large glass of lemonade as hot as possible, or a glass of hot water containing a teaspoonful of cream of tartar, with a little sugar if desired.

Should there be a pain in the chest, side or back, indicating pleurisy or pneumonia, dip a small towel in cold water, and wring it as dry as possible. Fold the towel so it will cover a little more surface than is affected by the pain. Cover this with a piece of flannel, and both with oiled silk, or better, with oiled linen; now wind a strip of flannel a foot wide several times around the chest.

The heat of the body will warm the towel almost immediately, the oiled linen and flannel will retain the heat and moisture, and steaming the part will generally cause the pain to disappear.

Should there be pain or soreness in the throat, you should treat it in a similar manner with wet compress and flannel bandage.

Eat sparingly of plain, simple food. Baked apples and other fruit, bread and butter, bread and milk, milk toast, baked potatoes or raw oysters may be eaten.

By following the above directions intelligently and faithfully you will ordinarily check the progress of the cold and prevent serious, possibly fatal illness.—Youth's Companion.

Dust in Furnace Pipes.

Listen to what an experienced master plumber has to say:

"The amount of dust and dirt that will collect in the furnace pipes can only be realized by those who have had occasion to clean them out. Most furnaces that have been in use for some time become covered with dust, and it is not surprising when the furnace is heated to a red heat some sort of smell should be given out. The 'burnt smell' may be warning to us not to breathe it. When meat has not a good odor we do not care to eat it, and it might be a good plan not to breathe air that does not smell as fresh as it should.

"The pipes should all be swabbed out with a large carriage sponge fastened to a flexible wire that will go into the bends, and the amount and quality of unclean stuff it will bring up will satisfy any one of the necessity of this cleaning. If it is repeated once a week through the winter there will be little complaint made about the dust from the furnace, and the improvement in the air will be noticed by every one."—Shirley Dare's Letter.

Knife Work of Thirteen Years.

Nicholas Levisler, No. 1620 Hanover street, has erected in his parlor a wooden model of a large country residence which he made with a penknife. The building measures four feet by two, is two stories high, with a French roof and observatory, and has bow-windows and porches. A flight of stairs connects the first and second floors, both of which are neatly carpeted, and the walls are covered with paper. The parlor and bedrooms are filled with furniture and have chandeliers hung from the ceilings. The model contains nearly "all modern conveniencies." It stands in a garden that occupies almost all the parlor floor. On the grounds are gravel walks, with settees, a pump, and trough, an airy little structure for courting couples, and a strong watch dog. Mr. Levisler, who is a laborer, has been at work on the model for thirteen years, doing small parts at night when he returned from his day's occupation.—Baltimore Sun.

Ingrowing Nails.

A correspondent of the Scientific American say: "About ten years ago I cured ingrowing nails on both my big toes in the following manner, which can be done by any one who has the least amount of ingenuity and patience: First, thoroughly clean the parts, and then pack in front of the nail cotton or lint as hard as may be borne. This will remain with comfort for three or four days, then remove and in front of the pellet will be found a hardened mass of flesh; scrape this away and repack, continuing the operation until the corner of the nail has grown out, and is beyond the soft tissues of the toe. Of course, easy-fitting shoes or boots should be worn during the treatment and ever after."

This is a "Solid!"

The world is made of solidity and fluidity. There are "solid" men and women, "solid" banks and institutions, "solid" hills and mountains and "solid" merchandise. Then there are thin and vapory men and women, watered stocks and "wishy-washy" goods, which are blown away by the breath of public opinion. Of all the solid, substantial combinations of economy and effectiveness, Brussels soap stands in the front rank in all well regulated communities.

A Rara Avis.

To the Editors of the Quincy Patriot:

SIRS: In passing through Wollaston Heights a day or two ago, my attention was attracted to the very handsome church that is in process of erection for the Unitarian society. When finished it will be of necessity an attractive place of worship. I heartily wish the society success in their work and hope they may soon find it too small to accommodate the worshippers. One thing, however, sorely puzzled me and that was to know by what canon of architectural law the designer of this church was induced to include two dreadfully high, homely looking, red brick chimneys on the roof of a granite church? and why utterly disfigure the otherwise charming tout ensemble of the front by erecting one of these same homely chimneys along side the unique granite tower.

Surely there is a lack of taste or judgment in erecting two such chimneys, especially the front one. But if the chimneys are not quite in keeping with ecclesiastical architecture what shall be said about the homely looking freak of nature—the legless rooster—perched on the apex of the tower. It would have been difficult to make such a monstrosity look attractive had it been that the animal was painted in gold and colors; but as it is, he is black and dismal and would be a disfigurement even on a barn roof, which would be a far more appropriate place for such a prodigy than on the tower of a new and modern style church. I do hope the next time I pass that way the amputated rooster will have taken wing and flown away and taken that hideous front chimney with it.

Beating the Slot.

There was a very funny episode in a Vine-street resort a few evenings since.

The place was one of those weighing machines, where a cent dropped into a slot causes a hand to indicate the person's weight.

A party of three or four were testing their avoirdupois, when Private Officer John Conway stepped up and became an interested on-looker. The last one of the party whispered to his companions, and, stepping on to the platform, put his lips to the slot and blew hard. The hand whirled around to the 190 mark, just as if he had put a copper cent into the slot with his hand. Officer Conway's interest increased, and then his eyes began to bulge as he saw one after another of the party blow into the slot and the dial hand respond showing their weights.

"Another way of beating the slot," he remarked. "I wasn't on to it. Let me try."

Conway weighs something over 200 pounds. He prides himself on his powerful lungs.

Stepping upon the platform, he placed his mouth to the opening and gave a terrific blast. The hand didn't stir.

"Poor fellow," pityingly remarked one of the crowd. "Lungs nearly gone."

Conway gave him an indignant look, and again placing his lips to the slot, blew in the machine until his face was fiery red. Still the hand didn't move.

Scratching his head in a perplexed manner, he stepped down. Then each of the party repeated the performance blowing into the slot and making the hand whirl around to the proper figure. It seemed as easy as falling off a log.

"Best thing in the world," said one, striking his breast. "Develops the lungs and makes a fellow like a new man."

Conway by this time had regained courage and thinking that perhaps something had ailed his lungs, again mounted the platform. This time he blew harder than ever, and his breath could be heard rattling through the internal works of the machine. But still the hand remained stationary.

With many a pity glance and remark about the "feeble old fellow," the crowd sauntered out and nearly exploded with laughter on the sidewalk. Of course each had placed a cent in his mouth and had shoved it into the slot with his tongue.

Conway stood and watched the machine for half an hour and then walked off with a look on his face that could not be described. Every now and then he would tap his chest, draw a long breath and then shake his head. "Got to see a doctor," he muttered, as he started off on his beat. —Cincinnati Enquirer.

Troublesome Coin.

Canadian coin is of no small worry in metroplitan life. Intrinsically it is worth more than our own, but practically it is commercially tabooed and is always a source of irritation and sometimes personal loss, except to those who deal in it as a commodity. Nearly every time you get change a 10-cent or 25-cent Canadian coin will slip in—usually the former—which can scarcely be detected from our dime, says the Pittsburg Dispatch. Then when you are in a hurrying line at an elevated station the ticket agent will push the coin back to you and you must fumble around for more money. If you should board a street car and happen to have no other change short of a $5 note you will be compelled to get off and get change, for the conductor will neither accept your Canadian piece nor change anything bigger than a $2 bill. You may not have noticed up to that time that you had the doubtful coin. You take an inward oath that you will never accept another, and during the next hour will probably be caught again. Some ttrademen will take the coin at par, others at a discount. The result is it is shifted on somebody else and gets passed around in some way—perhaps to you once more. There are business men who let this coin accumulate, and finally sell it to a broker, who in turn makes a good margin on it by shipping it at a premium back to its own country.—Boston Herald.

Perpetuating a Man's Memory.

The late Mr. Junius Morgan, the well know London and New York banker, among many other benefactions, helped, a few years ago, to start an English charitable society called the National Pension Fund for Nurses, of which the Princess of Wales is president. At the annual meeting, at which the princess conferred certificates of membership on 750 trained nurses and the genial prince made a pleasant speech, the nurses themselves brought unsolicited contributions for the establishment of a fund to aid poorer nurses when ill or out of employment, the endowment to be called the "Morgan Fund," in token of their gratitude to the generous American. —Harper's Bazar.

Honest Money.

The following speech by Hon. Elijah A. Morse, in the National House of Representatives, we copy from the Congressional Record of Saturday last:

Mr. Chairman, as an offset to the free-silver speech of the distinguished Democrat from Arkansas [Mr. Rogers], in favor of a debased currency, in which he speaks for the Democratic party, I desire to send to the Clerk's desk and have read some resolutions offered by Mr. Quincy, the leader of the Democratic party in the Massachusetts Legislature, day before yesterday. I predict, Mr. Chairman, that when these resolutions reach consideration in the Massachusetts Legislature they will pass unanimously; not a Democratic member will dare to vote against them. Men of all parties in Massachusetts believe in honest money. They believe in a dollar with a hundred cents, and no part of it fiat; and I say further that not a Democrat could have been elected from Massachusetts as a member of the next Congress who declared himself in favor of a debased currency or in favor of free silver. The State was carried against the Republicans in the recent campaign by misrepresentation and falsehood.

It was denied on the stump in Massachusetts in the late campaign, as claimed by the gentleman from Arkansas, that the Democratic party stood for debased currency and for free silver.

The provisions of the McKinley bill were shamefully misrepresented, peddlers were employed to pretend to offer to sell goods, and when the tremendous price asked was complained of, the people were told that it was the effects of the McKinley bill. As a specimen lie the laboring men were told that the poor man's house would cost him more now because the McKinley bill doubled the duty on lumber (it reduced it one-half), and that lie was repeated night after night in my district, and the misrepresentation of the true position of the Democratic party upon the question now under consideration was a part and parcel of the campaign of lying, falsehood, and misrepresentation by which Massachusetts elected a Democratic governor and a majority of Democratic Congressmen to the Fifty-second Congress.

The truth is dawning upon the people of my State, Mr. Chairman, but I fear too late to prevent the appalling financial disaster sure to overtake the country at the meeting of the next Congress unless a Republican President shall interpose a veto.

The Clerk then read the resolutions introduced by Mr. Quincy, of Quincy:

"Resolution in favor of the maintenance of the bimetallic standard of value, and against the debasement of the currency through the free coinage of silver.

"Whereas the people of this Commonwealth, without distinction of party, are generally opposed to any legislation which will lead to the debasement of the Federal currency and the substitution of a single depreciated standard of value, based upon silver, for the present double standard, based upon gold and silver circulating at a parity; and

"Whereas such legislation, while injurious to the whole community, would bear with especial hardship upon the wage-earning masses of the people; and

"Whereas the free coinage of silver, as proposed by a measure now pending before the Senate of the United States, would bring about these results in a comparatively short period of time, destroying the chances of securing an international agreement for maintaining gold and silver at a parity, threatening the ability of the Treasury to maintain gold payments, and thus carrying gold to a premium and withdrawing it from the currency:

"Resolved, That we hereby declare our opposition to the free coinage of silver, and protest against the passage of such legislation by Congress.

Resolved, That these resolutions be communicated to Congress, and that a copy thereof be transmitted to each of the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this Commonwealth."

Everything Packed.

"Tommy, I am afraid you don't like to be told of your faults," said a mother, and Tommy replied evasively, "Well, I can bear hearing about one or two, but folks always think of so many!"

It does indeed seem at times as if our friends, having begun to rehearse our failings, were determined to make a thorough piece of work.

Two little boys had been making a visit, and on the morning of their departure the father said to the elder:

"Dick, why is your hair so rough?"

"I couldn't smooth it, papa. I've packed my comb."

"And from the state of your hands I conclude you must have packed your nail brush too."

"Yes, papa, last night."

"I guess he must have packed up his prayers, too, chimed in the younger brother, "'cause he didn't say 'em last night or this morning!"—Youth's Companion.

A Drop of Ink.

"I don't see why you don't let me play with Robert Scott," pouted Walter Brown.

"I know that he does not always mind his mother, and smokes cigars, and sometimes swears. But I have been brought up better than that. He won't hurt me, and I should think you would trust me. Perhaps I can do him good."

"Walter," said his mother, "take this glass of pure water, and put just one drop of ink into it."

"O mother who would have thought one drop would blacken the whole glass so?"

"Yes; it has changed the color of the whole, has it not? It is a shame to do that. Just put one drop of clear water in it and restore its purity," said his mother.

"Why, mother, you are laughing at me. One drop, nor a dozen, nor fifty would do that."

"No, my son; and therefore I cannot allow one drop of Robert Scott's evil nature to mingle with your careful training, many drops of which will make no impression on him."—Christian Advocate.

Is Stanley a Pirate?

Mr. E. L. Godkin, in the February number of The Forum, undertakes to prove that the expedition to relieve Emin was clearly a piratical undertaking, since it had the sanction of no government and its leader was responsible to no power. Mr. Godkin expresses the highest admiration for Stanley's courage and endurance, and approves of his conduct of the expedition. It is its legal character only that he criticises. Other articles that will appear in the February Forum are: "The Vanishing Surplus," by Senator Carlisle; "The Farmer's Changed Condition," by Prof. Rodney Welch; "The Government and the Indians," by Hiram Price; a biographical essay by Prof. Gildersleeve, of the Johns Hopkins University, and half a dozen other essays.

Extension of Free Delivery.

Understanding that the government contemplated extending the free delivery system to all parts of the city now uncovered, and knowing that an inspector from the Post Office department had visited this city and inspected the offices at Wollaston, Atlantic and Quincy Point with that object in view, a PATRIOT representative called upon Postmaster Adams to get some official information.

Mr. Adams said: "Inspector Stoddard, who was recently here from Washington, has recommended to the department that the whole city shall now be covered by carriers. It is the policy of a department to give the whole of a city free delivery and not limit it to certain parts, as is the case of Quincy. I see by the LEDGER that a petition is now being circulated in Atlantic for free delivery and is being generally signed.

People have an erroneous idea that the post-offices in these sections will be abolished. Theoretically, they will; practically, they will not. That is to say, the government will hereafter designate them as postal stations. The boxes will be retained, stamps sold and letters registered, the only difference being that the government will deliver the mail at the houses, or, if the residents do not wish they can have it placed in boxes as heretofore.

Street boxes will be located in convenient places throughout the various districts.

If the system is established at Atlantic, at the same time it is at Wollaston, and which Inspector Stoddard has recommended the Department to do, there will probably be four collections from the boxes and stations and three from the stations alone. There will be five deliveries from the main office to the stations and three from the stations to the houses.

Regarding the Wollaston collections and deliveries Mr. Adams said that the collections would be as follows:

5.45 A. M. from boxes and station.
8.00 " " " " "
12.00 M. " "
1.00 P. M. " "
2.30 " " "
4.30 " " " " "
6.00 " " "

The deliveries will be as follows:

Leaving the Quincy office at 7 and 11 A. M., 12.30, 4, and 6.30 P. M., for the station, and from the station at 8 A. M., 1 and 4.30 P. M.

There is but little opposition in Wollaston to the proposed change, and when the residents of that ward understand that the government will not grant free delivery to Atlantic, unless Wollaston agrees to it, what little opposition there is will be withdrawn.

The Sailor's Home.

IT looks as if the Traveller writer meant business in exposing the management of the National Sailors' Home, and that the charge of mismanagement was well backed up. The evidence grows more and more serious upon investigation. It seems formal charges were preferred some months ago, and if investigated were not done properly, as the old veteran who preferred them was unaware of a hearing.

The Traveller says editorially: "We published Tuesday evening a detailed account of the condition of things at the Quincy Naval Home. Complaints had come to us in so many ways, and with such definite charges, that we sent a trusty, fearless man to look up the facts. Of the facts there can be no question. Before allowing the statements to be given the public, however, we sought an explanation from those in authority, and became personally satisfied that it was a case, of which there are all too many, in which the unfortunate are treated in a heartless manner, while the management is shielded by the distinguished men upon the board of trustees, who give little or no attention to their duties. It seems to be parallel to the case of eminent bank directors who do not direct, and in whom the public has no interest until the undirected agents wreck the bank. It is simply an outrage for any man to be entrusted with the use of charitable funds who can talk of those for whom he is supposed to provide comfortably as one of these men has spoken in our presence. Our condemnation is based, not on the reports of the suffering inmates, nor on the observed condition of things alone, but rather on the tone of the conversation of the man to whom we looked as the highest representative of the sentiment and wisdom behind the management. This is an evil that will not down until the flag floats over the naval veterans, until the sick and aged are better cared for, until the building is made reasonably comfortable, until it shall be possible for comrades to know the graves of their dead, until these men are spoken of respectfully, at least decently, by those who are entrusted with the responsibility of the management of the home and its funds."

Prof. Koch's Disclosure.

Prof. Koch evokes a few smiles and some humorous comment, says the Christian Leader, by his description of his consumption cure:

"It consists of glycerine extract derived from the pure cultivation of the tubercle bacilli." In fact there is in the description nothing to laugh at, nor is there a word that need be unintelligible. "Bacilli" are living creatures. "Tubercle" bacilli are a kind of creatures that assail the tissues of the lungs, and thereby create consumption: "tuberculous disease" is the physician's technical name for consumption. In preying upon the lungs the bacilli create a poison which in turn creates dead matter. Now happily, this dead matter is the foe of the very creatures that have caused it: it may envelope them and so smother them. Koch's theory is that his lymph, or "paratoloid," being injected after the manner of inoculation,—if passed into the stomach it is powerless,—will reinforce the bacilli poison in its destructive reaction upon the bacilli themselves: it is in fact identical with bacilli poison except that it has a "pure" creation,—the same as has the vaccine matter used for small pox. Ten minutes of application will see the meaning and the coherence of Prof. Koch's disclosure.

Water Supply.

Friday F. B. Stearns, Chief Engineer of the State Board of Health, made an official investigation of the proposed source of supply for the new water system for the city. He was accompanied by W. W. Ewell, the Commissioner of Public Works, Councilmen Newcomb and Bass, who were members of the Council committee of 1890, Engineer Blake, ex-Councilman Shaw and George W. Prescott of the PATRIOT. Particulars will be given in Saturday's LEDGER.

Engineer Stearns makes his report to the State Board of Health, who will report to the city. Their investigation may cover several weeks. They hold regular meetings on the first Tuesday of each month.

Mayor Fairbanks intended to accompany the party, but could not arrange his business so as to get away.

Next Tuesday a special election will be held throughout the city for the election of one Councilman-at-large, and Ward Six (Atlantic) will also elect one Ward Councilman.

The candidates-at-large are Roger H. Wilde, Republican and John A. Duggan, Democratic.

The candidates for Councilmen in Ward Six are the same as at the annual city election, Daniel C. Lyons, Democrat, and Louis Rinn, Republican.

Richards, treasurer of the Craig & Richards' Granite Company of this city, and Miss Florence A. Lowe, third daughter of Mr. George and Mrs. Annie Lowe, of Chelsea.

The bride looked pretty, attired in a gown of cream cashmere trimmed with brocaded silk and lace, she wore no head dress but carried a boquet of bridal roses.

The work of removing the obstructions along the line of Sachem brook, under the direction of Commissioner Ewell, from Hancock street to Elmwood avenue, Wollaston is a long needed improvement, and meets the hearty approval of the citizens. The policy of doing the best you can under the circumstances always has merit, and will insure the appreciation it deserves.

The Wollaston W. C. T. U. will hold its business meeting for the election of officers on Friday afternoon, Jan. 30, at 3 o'clock.

The following officers were elected for ensuing year:

Clerk and Treasurer,—Edward L. Robbins.

Deacon,—A. A. Lincoln.

Two members of Standing Committee,—N. G. Nickerson and S. B. Harrington.

Supt. of Sunday school,—Edward Hewitson.

"The Gleaners," King's Daughters, elected the following officers for the ensuing year:

President,—Mrs. William Wight.
Vice President,—Geo. A. Litchfield.
Secretary,—W. H. Brasee.
Treasurer,—R. D. Wentworth.

Thursday's heavy rain turned Sachem and Furnace brooks into minature rivers. Both brooks overflowed their banks. The large meadow of the Adams estate bordering on Newport avenue had about a foot and a half of water over it, caused by the small culvert which carries the brook under the avenue.

QUINCY POINT.

Mr. Gershom Clements, one of the oldest citizens in the city, is quite ill at his home on Washington street, Quincy Point.

Considerable interest is being shown at the meetings held in the vestry of the Corner church, Quincy Point. Mr. Lisle still conducts the meetings which are held every evening. Mrs. Lisle speaks to the ladies Tuesday and Thursday afternoons. This is the third week, and every evening finds the meetings well attended.

Mr. T. B. Pollard, who for sometime has had charge of the music at the Washington street Congregational church. Quincy Point, was offered and has accepted the position as chorister at the Congregational church, Quincy. Mr. Pollard has given a great deal of time and work to the music at the Point, and will be greatly missed both by the choir and congregation.

Daughters of the King.

On Wednesday afternoon and evening the "Whatsoevers," a circle of King's Daughters, connected with the Centre Congregational church, observed their first anniversary by a social tea and literary entertainment at the house of one of their members, Miss Nellie Mitchell of Pleasant street.

Business over, about six o'clock an ample collation was served, after which an hour or more was spent socially and in the enjoyment of a pleasant programme of music and readings.

Miss Mitchell set the ball in motion by a piano solo, followed by the recital of an original poem by Miss Nina Elliott, another piano solo by Miss Fay and a reading by Miss Rosa Drake bearing upon the opportunities daily occurring to the King's Daughters to scatter seeds of kindness along life's pathway. After music by Miss Hitchcock, a recitation entitled "Little Boy Blue," was given by Miss Gurney of Wollaston in a pleasing and unaffected way. Then came a vocal duett, a colloquy, illustrating the work of the organization, and a piano solo by Miss Gray, which brought to a close the formal exercises of an occasion thoroughly enjoyed by all present.

The Circle, which now numbers twenty-two, has reason to congratulate itself upon the good accomplished in its brief existence. In a backward glance over the twelvemonth it can recall three barrels of clothing collected and sent to Miss Steele of the Chattanooga Mission, the presentation of a clock for the main ward of the City Hospital, a pillow for its invalids, numerous comfort bags for the use of sailors, sent to their good friend, Mr. Snow of the Boston Mission, and, together with these charities, unobtrusive acts of kindness in ministering to the "shut-ins" in private homes in our own community.

May the truth embodied in their latest motto: "Not to be ministered unto but to minister," so permeate these young lives that this circle will widen into other ever-increasing circles like those on a still lake when a pebble is cast into its depths.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Dorchester Mutual Fire Insurance Company was held at their office, in Neponset, on Tuesday last. The following persons were chosen directors for the year ensuing:

Herman Ezexon, accompanied by a bottle of liquor, a larger part of which was under his vest, attempted to navigate the ice covered streets near Gurney's store, Thursday afternoon. In this he was unsuccessful and after measuring his length in the water several times, he was arrested by Officer Hunt.

Fatal Accident.

Cyrus Waterhouse, a well-known and respected citizen of Atlantic, was instantly killed Wednesday evening at the Atlantic station by the 5.15 outward South Shore train from Boston.

Mr. Waterhouse was employed as a blacksmith at the Wollaston Machine shops, and was on his way and had almost reached his home when he was killed, almost at his own door.

It seems he had walked up the track and had nearly reached the bridge when he stepped to the side of the track to allow an inward train to pass. As soon as the train had passed he crossed over on to the outward track, immediately in front of the outward express train, which struck him, breaking his arm and making a concussion on his head which must have caused instant death.

Medical Examiner Gilbert was notified, and the body removed to Hall's undertaking rooms.

Mr. Waterhouse was about 65 years of age and leaves a widow and two sons.

Complimentary Supper.

A good feeling evidently exists between Mr. A. R. French, proprietor of the Granite Clothing Company in this city, and his present and past clerks, and the bond of friendship was undoubtedly cemented closer Wednesday evening when employer and employes sat down to one of Young's suppers.

There were present: Mr. E. F. Porter, Mr. Geo. N. Nash Mr. Arthur W. Ryder, Mr. Wm. M. Rea, from the Granite Clothing Co, Mr. W. J. Earle, Mr. William Earle, from the Weymouth Clothing Co, Mr. B. Stevens, of Braintree Clothing Co., Mr. Cheeney, from Stoughton.

Fifth Anniversary.

Granite lodge, No. 193, Order Sons of St. George, celebrated its fifth anniversary Wednesday evening, by a gathering of the members with their wives and sweethearts at Faxon hall.

The first thing in order was a short entertainment which consisted of an address of welcome by John T. Pearce, W. P., followed by a solo by Mr. Louis C. Griffiths, entitled "Death of Nelson," also a solo entitled "Little Sister is gone to sleep" by Mr. John Lillicrap, a reading by Miss Mabel Oxford, and solos by Messrs. D. Williams, R. E. Chapple and J. Symonds; the selections by these gentlemen were "Bugler," "Sold Everywhere," and "The Little Hero." Prof. Clare then entertained the audience with his feats of ledgerdemain black art.

An adjournment was then made to the lower hall where an anniversary supper was enjoyed, after which there was a social dance, music being furnished by Wilson's orchestra. The grand march was led by Mr. and Mrs. Samuel T. Rex.

The floor was in charge of Samuel T. Rex, assisted by F. Barnicoat, H. Barnicoat and John Lawry, while the committee of arrangements consisted of John T. Pearce, Jas. Richards, S. T. Rex, C. H. Richards, H. Holton, R. E. Chapple, and J. F. Kemp.

W. Andrews and W. D. Steer were the reception committee.

Among the guests present were representatives from Earl Shaftesbury lodge of Brockton; Victory, of Cambridgport; Garfield and Albion, of Boston, and Mayflower of Chelsea.

The order of Sons of St. George is composed of Englishmen, their sons and grandsons, and its object is similar to many of the fraternal societies in existence today; namely to alleviate the suffering of its members in a pecuniary manner. Granite lodge now numbers 122 members, 12 of whom were initiated during the past year. It has paid to its members in sick benefits the past year $512, and for donations $152. During the past five years it has paid out in sick benefits $1441.

The True Test
For Baking Powders.

The severe analytical tests to which the various baking powders have from time to time been placed have demonstrated clearly to the public the relative merits of the different brands from a scientific point of view. The official Government investigations, for instance, have shown that the Royal Baking Powder gives off the largest amount of leavening gas, and therefore is the most economical for general use. They also show the Royal to be absolutely pure and wholesome.

But the crucial test of the kitchen is, after all, the most satisfactory to the housekeeper. A baking powder that never fails to make light, sweet, wholesome and palatable bread, biscuit, cake, etc., is the one that will be selected by the practical housekeeper and received into her kitchen for continuous use. This test the Royal Baking Powder has stood for twenty-five years without failure, and hence its reputation as the best baking powder made has spread from house to house, until its use has become as universal as its merits are unrivaled.

CITY COUNCIL.

Councilman Spear was the only absentee at the City Council meeting, Monday evening. The attendance of citizens was above the average, including several ex-Councilmen. Mayor Fairbanks and the following heads of departments were present: Commissioner Ewell, Treasurer Adams, Auditor Hall and others.

Upon motion of Councilman Sherman the reading of the records was suspended.

Councilman Fallon who was absent at the organization two weeks previous was then sworn in by City Clerk Spear.

The Willard Schoolhouse.

The following was received from Mayor Fairbanks:

Mayor's Office,
Quincy, Jan. 19, 1891.

James Thompson, Esq.,
Pres. of City Council:

A communication having been received from Messrs. Sturgis & Cabot, the architects upon the Willard schoolhouse, certifying that the neglect of the contractors, the Messrs. Cushing, to carry out the provisions of their contract with the city for building said schoolhouse, had been such as to furnish sufficient ground for the city to terminate their employment, take possession of the premises and employ other persons to finish the work, and provide materials therefor, acting under the advice of the City Solicitor I caused a written notice to be served on the said Cushings, notifying them that their employment would be terminated in three days after service of the notice. This notice was served January 13, 1891.

The premises are now in the possession of the city. It remains to take such steps as may be necessary and proper to complete the building.

The amount remaining in the treasury of the sum already appropriated for the purpose is $32,756.36.

About $10,000 more will be required to complete the work. Whatever sums may be received from the bondsmen will, of course, reduce the total cost of building to the city. I therefore recommend that an appropriation of not less than $10,000 be made by the City Council, and that the Treasurer be authorized to borrow the same upon the note of the city, payable in one year from July 1, 1891, and that the Commissioner of Public Works be requested to proceed forthwith and employ responsible persons to complete the building in accordance with the terms of the contract with said Cushings, the drawings and specifications therein referred to, having due regard to the rights of the bondsmen.

Respectfully,
H. O. Fairbanks, Mayor.

Councilman Moxon offered the following:

Ordered,—That the City Council hereby ratifies the action of His Honor, the Mayor, in terminating the employment of the Messrs. Cushing, and that the Commissioner of Public Works is hereby requested to proceed forthwith and employ responsible persons to complete the Willard school building in accordance with the terms of the contract with the Messrs. Cushing, the drawings and specifications therein referred to, having due regard for the rights of the bondsmen.

This order, and one authorizing a loan of $10,000, were read and ordered to a second reading.

Claim of Thomas Devine.

Mayor Fairbanks forwarded the claim of Thomas Devine for damages to team caused by defective highway. Laid on table until committees are appointed.

Rent at Houghs Neck.

The Mayor forwarded the claim of the estate of Relief Whicher for rent of land at Houghs Neck for Chemical Engine house. Laid on table.

Commissioner Appointed.

Mayor Fairbanks notified the Council of the nomination of W. Walter Ewell, as Commissioner of Public Works. Placed on file.

List of Jurors.

A list of jurors for 1891 was submitted. Read by the clerk and action deferred two weeks.

Auditor's Statement.

Auditor Hall submitted his monthly statement for Dec. 31, 1890. President Thompson requested the Auditor to read the same, but Councilman Sherman objected, and the Council thought it not necessary.

The Treasurer's statement was also received and laid on the table.

A Bill for $106.50.

The Mayor forwarded the claim of Michael McGovern for use of derrick on Common street. Laid on table.

1000 Reports.

An order of Councilman Duffield appropriating $700 to pay for the printing of 1000 reports, was ordered to a second reading.

Petitions.

Applications of A. P. Rousse for a common victualler's license, and E. F. Thayer for State Aid, were laid on the table.

Manager of Woodward Fund.

Upon motion of Councilman Jones, a ballot was taken for one Manager of the Woodward Fund, resulting in the unanimous re-election of George L. Gill.

City Messenger Re-elected.

The Council proceeded upon motion of Councilman Warner to elect a City Messenger, and Harry W. Tirrell was unanimously re-elected.

Auditor Re-elected.

Upon motion of Councilman Sherman the Council proceeded to the election of a City Auditor and John O. Hall was unanimously re-elected.

In Anticipation of Taxes.

The order authorizing the City Treasurer to borrow $60,000 in anticipation of taxes came up for its final reading.

Councilman Bryant believed it should be amended to read "as needed," arguing that it would now be imperative to borrow the whole amount.

The Council did not so interpret the order and it was passed to be ordained, 18 to 1.

Rules of the Council.

Councilman Newcomb's motion to take from the table his order for the adoption of the Rules of 1890 prevailed and the question then came upon their adoption.

Councilman Sherman moved to amend rule two, which required the records of the preceding meeting to be read, making it necessary only when requested by a Councilman. He said the rule had been suspended thirty-nine cases out of forty last year.

Councilmen Jones, Newcomb and Moxon objected but the amendment prevailed, 10 to 8.

Councilman Sherman then moved that Committees on streets consist of three members instead of five. Personally he did not believe in the ward system of committees.

Councilman Fallon believed each ward should be represented on the street committee.

Councilman Jones and Little also opposed and the amendment was lost.

Councilman Sherman's next amendment was to make the President of the Council, chairman of the Finance Committee.

This met with opposition from Councilman Jones and was lost.

Councilman Powers believed committees should not be given four weeks in which to report.

Councilman Jones favored, and Councilman Warner did not think it made much difference as committees generally took about as long as they wished.

No change was made.

Business for Committees.

Councilman Newcomb moved that all business laid over by the last Council be referred to appropriate committees, when appointed. Voted.

Councilman Jones moved that the business laid on the table this evening be taken therefrom and referred to appropriate committees, when appointed. Voted.

Washington Street.

Councilman Duffield moved that the attention of the Commissioner of Public Works be called to the condition of Washington street between Tisdale's stable and Mr. Dunn's residence. Voted.

Adjourned at 9.20 for one week.

Annual Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Quincy Hospital Corporation was held Monday evening at Faxon hall. William B. Rice, president of the corporation presiding.

Mr. Timothy Reed, secretary of the trustees, submitted his report which was accepted. Mr. Reed's report gave a brief history of the origin and final completion of the hospital, also a brief history of the railroad accident. He said the hospital was completed and in working order June 17, 1890. The number of patients received from June 17 to December 31, 1890, was 102, of which 74 had been discharged, 12 now remain and 16 have died; ten of the latter being victims of the railroad accident. He hoped the endowment fund, which is now $28,600.50 would soon be increased to $100,000. He also gave an outline of the financial standing which is embodied in the treasurer's report, which was made by Mr. Theophilus King, as follows:

Receipts.

From Ladies Aid Society	$3,700 00
From City of Quincy	1,000 00
Income from Endowment fund	794 31
Hospital Sunday	385 81
Granite Association	500 00

O.C.R.R. Co. on acc't of accident	7,000 00
Individuals and associations	1,864 51
Total	$16,244 70

Expenditures.

Paid matron, nurses and labor to Jan. 1, 1891	$3,932 04
Furnishing and refurnishing, owing to R.R. accident patients	3,308 56
Provisions and housekeeping	3,334 79

Insurance	241 50

Total expenditures	$11,627 00
Balance on hand	4,617 70
	$16,244 70

The corporation then proceeded to the election of a clerk and Mr. Warren W. Adams was re-elected and was sworn in by Mr. King.

Upon motion of Dr. Gordon the board of trustees was increased from twelve to fifteen, of which twelve are elected by the corporation, two by the City Council and the Mayor, ex-officio. The following trustees were then elected: William B. Rice, John H. Gilbert, Theophilus King, Joseph W. Robertson, Timothy Reed, John A. Gordon, Francis L. Hayes, Rupert F. Claflin, John Quincy Adams, James F. Burke, Roger H. Wilde, Charles H. Porter.

Interesting remarks were then made by Dr. Gordon, who said we could not tell by the past what the expenses of the coming year would be because it had been under an unusual expense, but he hoped the coming year would be about $6500; and as we have money enough on hand to carry us through half of the coming year he had no fears about the remainder of the year, and if the future is as good as the past we have a great future before us in our hospital. The doctor thought they were extremely fortunate in securing so good a matron. There was one thing that was needed very much and that was a laundry, the expense of which would be between $1000 and $1500, and hoped such a one would be had before the close of the year. He also said a school for nurses had been established for the past two months and had now four young ladies training for this branch of the work and in a very short time anyone in the city can secure a good nurse from the hospital at a moderate cost.

Mr. Rice spoke of the amount of interest which the people of Quincy had taken in the Hospital, for every man, woman and child had done something towards it.

During the evening fourteen new members were elected to the corporation, making a total membership now of about 400.

Comparison of Votes.

The contest at the special election of Jan. 27 will wage the hottest in Ward Six, which it has been decided shall fill both vacancies in the City Council. It has a Ward Councilman to elect, and the candidates are the gentlemen who received the tie vote at the annual election. Both candidates for Councilman-at-large are from his ward, Messrs. Roger H. Wilde and John A. Duggan. Mr. Wilde has served two years very acceptably in the Council and by the ward returns of the annual election was elected by two votes. Mr. Green was but two behind and petitioned for a recount, and a tie resulted. Now Mr. Green declines a renomination, and the Democrats have nominated a Ward Six man to run against Mr. Wilde. Here are the votes of Messrs. Wilde and Duggan, who were running for the same office in December:

	Wilde.	Duggan.
Ward One,	233	155
Ward Two,	184	164
Ward Three,	214	208
Ward Four,	150	350
Ward Five,	207	49
Ward Six,	138	103
	1126	1029

New Commissioner.

About 8 o'clock Monday Commissioner Alexander handed over the office to Mayor Fairbank's appointee, Ex-Councilman William Walter Ewell, who was sworn in by City Clerk Spear. The retiring official wished Commissioner Ewell and his department success.

The new official needs no introduction to Quincy people, being a native of this city, and for a number of years one of its successful business men. He held his first public office last year, when he was elected a Councilman from Ward One. He was chairman of the Committee on Legislative Matters, Elections and Returns, but his best work was done on the Committee on Contracts, Streets, Ways, Sidewalks, Bridges and Lights. He personally investigated every subject referred to these committees and was a regular attendant, both at Council and committee meetings.

He informs a representative of the Patriot that he will give his whole time to the office, and endeavor to make it a success.

It is a business administration which the city wants and may reasonably expect of Commissioner Ewell. His first official act, he informs us, was to stop the building of Hancock street at the foot of [illegible].

The report that Superintendent Spencer had been reappointed is denied by Commissioner Ewell, although he will undoubtedly be retained if satisfactory arrangements can be made.

Here's success to Commissioner Ewell.

From the State House.

Boston, Mass., Jan. 21, 1891.

The first party division in the House came earlier in the session than might have been expected. It was on Friday, on the matter of the resolutions against the free coinage of silver. Mr. Quincy of Quincy, having offered his resolutions, waited quietly to oppose those drawn by the Republican conference as a substitute for his. When they appeared the difference in doctrine was not essential, but Mr. Quincy led the Democrats in opposition. They made an effort to postpone them to Monday, but the vote was on strict party lines, with the exception of Mr. Howe of Cambridge, a Democrat, who believed that they ought not to waste time over small matters, but ought to do the State's business and go home. By 78 to 118 they refused to postpone, and then by 125 to 78 they adopted the Republican resolutions instead of the Democratic. The form of the resolutions was not a matter of consequence, but the significance of the event was the display of partisan politics and the prospect that there will be much wasted time this session over party matters.

It is proposed to reapportion the income of the school fund to aid poor towns as follows: Half the income to go thus—to towns with not over $500,000 valuation, $275 each; with $500,000 to $1,000,000, $200 each; $1,000,000 to $2,000,000, $100 each; $2,000,000 to $3,00,000, $50 each. The other half to towns with valuation not over $3,000,000, to be apportioned among them relatively to the proportion of their school appropriations to their total appropriations.

In the annual report of the Gas Commissioners it is said that in spite of the great advance in the use of electricity, the consumption of gas is increasing also. In the past year 18 companies have reduced the price of gas. The total receipts of the gas companies have been $5,270,991 and their net receipts $1,608,818. Of the 60 electric light companies only 21 pay dividends. There has been a decrease of 1776 in the number of public gas lights. Three fatal accidents have occurred from the use of electric lights.

From the annual report of the woman's prison at Sherborn it appears that the receipts were $3000 over last year; average number of inmates, 219, a decrease of 11; decrease in expenses, about $10,000; net cost of supporting each prisoner, $162.45; average age of the prisoners, 28 years. The discipline of the prison is good and the placing out of the prisoners has been successful.

The annual report of the Concord prison shows that 733 prisoners were there at the close of the year. The American born numbered 315 and those of American parentage 99.

Chief Wade of the district police reports 849 persons injured by accidents in factories and workshops during the year, 42 fatally. The force has made 2041 liquor seizures, capturing 2830 gallons of spirituous liquors and 16,900 of malt, which were sold and came to $2200.

Business moves unusually slow for the opening of the session and it seems to be chargeable in part, at least, to an effort on the part of experienced members of the House to shorten the session by giving the Committee on Rules the decision over the reference of all orders and petitions. It may be doubted whether it has ever happened before, as is the case this year, that the first hearing of the session occurred as late as Jan. 22, while, under the rules of both branches, no new business can be introduced after Feb. 4. This delay is a part of the penalty of a popular government, because the people will persist in keeping their experienced men at home and in sending a House with two-thirds of the membership green men every year. Col. Albert Clarke, the secretary of the Home Market club, who is a Vermonter and keeps up a close connection with public affairs in the Green Mountain state, tells me that this evil of inexperience exists to a far worse extent in the Vermont Legislature, even to the point of making serious confusion in the laws. The result there he declares to be directly chargeable to the biennial system, and so he is strongly opposed to the constitutional amendment for biennial elections which is pending here in its second year. The matter has been taken up and referred to the proper committee, but nothing more has been heard of it.

Gov. Russell has begun a practice which might easily be nursed into an important legislative reform—that of permitting heads of departments to address the senate and house directly, and thus state their need. Instead of taking the recommendations of the departments and incorporating them into his inaugural, he sent them to the senate in a special message, stating them to be the wishes of the departments. This enables the legislature to know, directly from these officers themselves, just what they want and it gives the officers an opportunity to be heard more before the committees than has been the custom. This will be the tendency. Now, if some persuasive legislator will move, in case of a contest over some department appropriation, that the official be invited to state his views to the senate or house, and they so vote, they will introduce an English parliamentary practice which has repeatedly proved its superiority to the custom in the state and national governments in the United States.

The Senate Democrats have organized by the choice of Messrs. Howard of Bristol, Thayer of Worcester, Haggerty of Worcester, Bradley of Essex and McNary of Suffolk as a caucus committee. Party spirit is watchful in the upper branch, though not demonstrative, and it will be strange if many hours are not wasted before the session closes.

Three heads of departments were changed on Wednesday, the third Wednesday of the month—a thing which does not often happen. At the same session of the council at which Judge Lothrop was appointed to Judge Devens' place on the Supreme bench, and Henry B. Lovering was nominated as warden of the State prison in place of Col. Russell of Worcester, Secretary of State Olin, Auditor Trefry and Attorney General Pillsbury were sworn to perform faithfully the duties of their office. It seems awkward yet to put these titles and names together, but habit will make the joints perfect.

Secretary Olin reappointed Clerks Edgett and Spear as first and second clerks and Attorney General Pillsbury named Charles H. Harris of Cambridge as second assistant attorney-general. First Assistant Bliss is in Washington and his place will not be filled till he returns. In the auditor's office all the clerks are under the civil service rules, so there can be no changes at this time. Secretary Peirce was given a handsome present of books upon his retirement and the state aid commission and its clerks adopted very kind and appreciative resolutions regarding Auditor Ladd. Mr. Ladd's farewell was full of feeling and he steps down and out with the thorough respect of his associates and with a most creditable record of faithfulness to the state's finances.

SATURDAY, JAN. 24, 1891.

Don't You Think So?

It's all very well to be jolly
When everything's going just right;
When in summer skies, showing no hint of
A shadow, the sun's shining bright;
When around you your merry friends cluster
With many a laugh-bringing jest,
And wherever you turn you discover
The world in its gala robes dressed.
But ah! 'tis sublime to the jolly
When mirth-loving spirits have fled,
When your path is in gloominess shrouded,
And the tempest bursts over your head;
When fainter hearts beg you to cheer them,
Though your own heart be lonely and drear,
And you scarce can help doubting if ever
The darkness will quite disappear.
The bird that sing sweetly when golden
The earth is, and gentle the wind,
When the bees hum content o'er the honey
That, hid in the bowers, they find,
When, vying in beauty and fragrance,
Red roses and white lilies grow,
And butterflies, splendid in raiment,
Through their airy realm flit to and fro,
Is a dear little songster; but dearer
Is the bird that its joy giving strain
Undaunted trills loudly and gayly
In spite of the chill and the rain,
For that to be jolly 'tis easy
In sunshine there isn't a doubt,
But ah! 'tis sublime to be jolly
When there's naught to be jolly about.

Household Receipts.

IRISH STEW. Cut two pounds of the neck of mutton into small pieces, put into a kettle with one onion sliced and a bunch of pot herbs nicely dressed. Simmer gently for one hour, then add two tablespoonfuls of rice, simmer ten minutes, add two potatoes cut into dice, and while they are cooking ten minutes longer make your dumplings. Put a pint of flour into a bowl, add a teaspoonful of salt and a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder, moisten this with about a gill of milk; the dough must be soft. Form it lightly into balls, drop them on the top of the stew, cover the kettle, boil ten minutes and season.

PARKER HOUSE ROLLS. Take two quarts of flour and thoroughly rub into it two tablespoonfuls of lard or shortening, one pint of cool boiled milk, two tablespoonfuls of brown sugar, one-half cup yeast and a little salt. If intended for breakfast, mix at noon, knead in the afternoon, and at night. In the morning knead again. Roll half an inch thick, cut out, butter one-half, and turn them over even. Put in pans, let them rise fifteen minutes and then bake.

COOKIES. One cup of butter, two cups of sugar, three eggs, half a small cup of milk six cups of flour, three teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a little lemon or cocoanut. Roll very thin, sprinkle with sugar, press lightly with the rolling-pin, cut out and bake quickly. These are very nice, and will keep for weeks, if kept in a tin-box in a dry place.

AUNT HELEN'S GINGERBREAD. Two cups of dark molasses, with one tea-spoonful of soda beaten into it; one large tablespoonful of ginger, a little salt, one egg well beaten, a piece of butter the size of an egg, melted, and all put into the molasses; add one cup of cold water, and enough flour to make about as thick as pound cake. Stir briskly.

☞ Four or five million Jews have recently been driven from their homes by Russian despotism. They are not probably a desirable addition to population in any civilized lands in the world. Russia has made them what they are, and it should be made the common law of nations that she should care for them. England has sent out agents warning these destitute creatures not to expect employment in that country. The United States has more freedom than any other nation and better educational facilities. We can care for more of Europe's poor, and care for them better than others but our hands are at present as full of this class from Russia, Poland and Italy as we can well afford. Treated well, all these in time make good citizens, but it is as possible to overload charity as it is to overload the stomach so that nothing can be well digested.—Exchange.

☞ A recent count shows that the Christian Endeavor movement begins the new year, 1891, with more than 13,000 societies, and at least 770,000 members. This is a gain of 110,000 members in six months. This is by far the largest gain in the history of the movement.

In New York, the other day, two letters were mailed simultaneously, one to Philadelphia, the other to Brooklyn, and the Philidelphia message was delivered first.

It's economical—Brussels soap.

Anecdotes.

"Shall you go to the opera this season as usual, Miss Helen."

Helen—"We don't know yet. Ethel and I want to go very much, but our brother George is on his college foot ball team, and we can't tell yet whether we shall be in mourning this season or not."

"Can you tell me what is the funniest part of a dog?"

Smith—"His tail, I guess; it's such a wag."

"No! the funniest part of a dog is his lung."

"How do you make that out?"

"They are the seat of his pants, don't you see?"—Smith, Gray & Co.'s Monthly.

Minister—"You ought to whip your boy for fishing on the Sabbath."

Deacon—"I intend to, sir; but I thought I'd let him clean them first."

She—Do you love me for myself alone?

He—Yes, and when we're married I don't want any of the family thrown in.

"Look here, Sam, my cigars disappear very mysteriously. I am afraid you—"

Sam Johnson—"No, sah; you are mistaken. I has a whole lot of fine cigars stowed away in my trunk from the gennerman I libbed with before you hired me."—Texas Siftings.

Teacher—"How was it that the lion did not eat Daniel when he was put in the den?"

Dennis O'Brien—"It wus Froiday, Oi'm thinkin'."

"Bridget, why don't the landlady have sweet potatoes any more?"

"S-s-h! Oi'm thinkin' the proice av sugar has riz."—Harper's Bazar.

A western editor lost ten subscribers by saying: "Many of our readers require an effective soap, and Brussels is just the thing they have needed for a long time."

Several New York churches now advertise their services in the elevated railroad structures.

One Dollar for Fifty Cents.

Competition and improved methods of manufacture have reduced the cost of drugs and other commodities fully one-half within the last ten years. In view of these facts the Proprietors of Van Wert's Balsam for the lungs have decided to give their patrons the benefit of the saving which they are thus able to make in the production of their remedies, and have therefore reduced the price of the Balsam and offer the bottle which has hitherto been sold for $1.00 for 50c. The Balsam can be obtained of GEORGE FIELD, Druggist, cor. Hancock and School streets. Trial size free.

New York Fashions.

STYLISH ACCESSORIES.

The corselet in great variety as to shape, is very fashionable for dressy wear and is both economical and convenient, since by means of it, deft transformations can be made or weak places in the corsage concealed upon occasion. A popular shape comes up about the height of a corset, slopes up in the back and front and with a slight point before and behind, extends an inch or so below the waist line. A new style shows a point back and front which extends nearly to the neck of the dress and curves low under the arms. Rows of ribbon placed on the corsage with corselet effect, are more than ever fashionable and narrow bands of material produce similar outlines, individual adaptation in both having full room for play.

BLACK VELVET

finished with gilt forms a very handsome corselet and is a most convenient accessory because it can be worn with different dresses and has of course the effect of making the waist look smaller, although this indeed can be said with truth regarding the corselet in general. Another convenient device for altering the appearance of a dress, are "jockeys" or deep caps which can be transferred to sleeves at option. In shape, they differ as much as corselets, some being in deep points, others straight and loose like cape sleeves on jackets, others puffed and round, but without exception they are high on the shoulders. By means of corselet and jockeys to match, a great deal of style is attainable and it is almost needless to add that the latter are provided with small safety pins underneath, sewed on securely.

RIBBON

is more than ever a garniture and on new party dresses of light wool or silk made with plain skirts, is put on in from three to five ruffles around the lower edge, in frills about the neck to match and for long sleeves, in ruffles falling over the hands. Gros grain ribbon about three inches wide with satin edge is usually employed, and a charming example of a dress in this style was of pink China silk made at Lord and Taylor's and worn by a young member of the Vanderbilt family at the Opera. It may be added, that sleeves if long, are now quite long, with lace or ruffles falling over the hand in Tudor style, a convenient method by which an old dress can be made to look new. A gown lately worn by Mrs. Astor at a reception, was of green Bengaline and pink brocade made with V neck and long sleeves finished by Chantilly ruffles.

NOTES AND ANSWERS.

Independent collars of black velvet are transferred from one dress to another and may match corselet and jockeys also transferable. The Medici shape is the choice in collars which are often lined with silk of a becoming color and trimmed with beads or passementerie.

"Mrs. E." A Greek costume could be suitably made of China silk, crepon or any soft falling material. Patterns are for sale by the pattern houses and the best finish would be a gilt or silver border in Greek key design. Bands to match hold the drapery on the shoulders and a cord and tassel depending from the belt, holds the drapery. Blue and silver are a lovely contrast.

"Emma." You could embroider a large meshed net with sprays in filoselle and made up over thin silk or satin, it would be pretty for evening.

LUCY CARTER.

Boston Theatres.

Hollis Street.

Notwithstanding the burning of the Fifth Avenue theatre in New York, Fanny Davenport will begin her engagement at the Hollis, next Monday night, as previously announced. The scenery for each act is being painted by different artists, while Miss Davenport's costumer has been cabled to for gowns. The most wonderful preparation made was by Mr. Furst, musical conductor, who has rewritten the entire music used in Cleopatra, entirely from memory. So although everything belonging to the staging of "Cleopatra" was destroyed less than a month ago at the Fifth Avenue theatre, yet so promptly did Miss Davenport set about replacing the loss that a grand production is expected at the Hollis next week.

Tremont.

The coming week will be the last of the all too short stay here of Mr. Palmer's Company; but it will prove a week of grand offerings. Besides the admirable actors who appear this week, Mrs. E. J. Phillips, Miss Seward, Messrs. Maurice Barrymore, Edward Bell, J. L. Ottomeyer, and others will be in the casts, and the famous plays, "Capt. Swift" Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday, and "Jim the Penman" Thursday, Friday, Saturday, matinee and evening, will be presented. Once again we shall see these greatest plays of their order in the modern theatrical library superbly cast and perfectly enacted. Our readers remember the re-excitement of admiration caused by Agnes Booth, in "Jim, the Penman," last season and that is sure to be repeated and again the unlimited satisfaction and pleasure of seeing her once more in her incomparable assumption in Capt. Swift.

Boston Museum.

Mr. R. M. Field advertises the long and prosperous run of "Betty's Finish," and "The Solicitor" as the "laughing season" and rightly to for there is more sparkle and fun in the plays than any that has yet been presented here this winter. Monday commences the sixth week.

Boston.

With a matinee this afternoon and the usual performance in the evening "The Crystal Slipper" will bid farewell to Boston for this season. On Monday the Hanlon-Volter Martinetti Company will appear in their renowned specialties.

Forty Years' Work for Woman Suffrage.

It is forty years since the first National Woman's Rights Convention was held in Worcester, in 1850. During these forty years, by means of this great movement in the interests of women, changes have been made vastly improving their condition. Their varied occupations, their improved means of education, the amelioration of unjust laws—all make the world a different world for women from what it was forty years ago. The Massachusetts Woman Suffrage Association is to celebrate this fortieth anniversary at Tremont Temple, in Boston, on Tuesday and Wednesday, Jan. 27 and 28. Eminent speakers will be present at this historic celebration.

Among the speakers will be Mrs. Julia Ward Howe, Lucy Stone, Mary A. Livermore, Susan B. Anthony, William Lloyd Garrison, Col. T. Wentworth Higginson, Helen Campbell, Mrs. Charlotte Emerson Brown, president of the Federation of Women's Clubs, Dr. Emily Blackwell, Hon. Wm. Dudley Foulke, president of Swarthmore College, Anna Garlin Spencer, Mrs. S. S. Fessenden, president Massachusetts W. C. T. U., Miss Mary L. Greene, LL. B., member of the Boston bar, and Miss Alice Stone Blackwell. Wellesley College will be represented by Prof. Eugsnia Morgan, Vassar College by Dr. Emma B. Culbertson and Mount Holyoke College by Prof. Eastman. Senator Warren, of Wyoming, and Hon. A. D. White, of Cornell University, are also expected.

☞ The Massachusetts state board of health has discovered that bogus coffee is having quite a sale in the state. The false berry is made out of flour and moulded and colored in exact imitation of the genuine, and the only safeguard is to trade with an honest dealer. Even then the consumer may be cheated through the dealer's ignorance of his wares.

The fame of Brussels soap does not consist of mere suds. It's economical.

How One Boy Faced The World.

About twelve years ago, a soldier's widow with one boy, and one girl lived in Chicago. The boy was less than ten years old; a handsome, dark-eyed, curly-haired young fellow, richly endowed in heart and mind, and having a true loyal love for his mother. They were very poor, and the boy felt that he ought to work instead of going to the public school, but his mother was a very intelligent woman, and could not bear to have him do this. He thought a great deal upon the subject, and finally begged a penny from his sister who was a few years older than himself. With this money he bought one copy of the daily paper at wholesale, and sold it for two cents. He was then careful to pay back the penny he borrowed (make a note of that, boys:) and he now had one cent of his own, with it he bought another, sold it for two cents, and so on. He took up his position in front of the Sherman House opposite the City Hall; this was a favorite place with the newboys, and they fought the little fellow fiercely; but he stood his grounds won standing room for himself and went on selling papers.

He became one of the most successful newsboys in the city, and at the age of fourteen had laid up money enough, besides helping his mother, so that he could afford to take a course of study in stenography and type-writing. He began in a class with two hundred others, when he graduated from the course, only six remained with him. There is something in this for you to think about. A great many start in the race, but few hold on to the end. They are like boys chasing a butterfly, pretty flowers along the way attract them, and they hear a bird sing somewhere in the woods, or they stop to skip pebbles in the river; it is only the few that go on—right straight on—who catch the butterfly we call success.

Well, this boy became the best stenographer in Chicago. When he was only eighteen he was president of their society. He then went to a leading college and took the entire four years' course of preparation in two years, at the same time supporting himself and his mother by his stenographic work for the professors. He kept up his health by regular outdoor exercise and riding the bicycle. He never tasted tea, coffee, tobacco or alcoholic drinks. His food was simple, mostly fish, vegetables and fruit. He had a good conscience, there was no meanness about him. When he was twenty years of age he became the private secretary of one of the greatest capitalists of America. Of course he had a large salary. He was clear cut in everything he did; there was no slackness in his word. The gentleman who employed him used tobacco and drank wine, but this young private secretary, with quiet dignity, declined both cigars and claret, though offered him by his employer in the most gracious manner. It is to the credit of the great capitalist, that when his secretary told him he never used tobacco or liquor, he answered, "I honor you for it young man."

The name of this remarkable Chicagoan is Jerome Raymond. He is now the private secretary of Bishop Thoburn, and is making a trip around the world. At the same time for his degree in the University, being permitted to substitute French and Sanscrit for some other studies that he would have taken if he were here.

He was my stenographer, on and off, for two years, and I think most highly of him. It seems to me I could not do a greater service than to tell you his simply story. He is a knight of the new chivalry, a champion of the White Cross, a believer in woman's ballot, a Prohibitionist in politics, and an earnest christian in faith and practise.

FRANCES E. WILLARD.

A Good Letter.

The following letter, received a few days ago by the Boston Herald from a prominent advertiser, is of interest, showing, as it does, what results the big and honest circulation of the Herald gives its patrons, as well as the general axiom that advertising pays:

NASHUA, N. H., Jan. 10, 1891.

Manager Boston Herald:

We take pleasure in giving you the results of some test advertisements:

Dec. 27, half page New York Evening Telegram brought 141 calls for pamphlets in one week.

Dec. 28, half page New York Sunday World brought 806 calls for pamphlets in one week.

Dec. 28, half page the Boston Sunday Globe brought 642 calls for pamphlets in one week.

Dec. 25, half page Boston Herald brought 1853 calls for pamphlets in one week.

Five hundred and forty-one letters from New York and West could not be traced.

We trust you will not raise the rates; but, if you do, you won't drive us out. Very truly yours.

AERATED OXYGEN COMPOUND CO.
C. S. Collins, M. D., Manager.

A MATTER FOR THOUGHT. Few of us know how rich we are. A wealthy merchant in a Western city met a former acquaintance whose ordinary condition is what is known as impecunious. This time, however his face was fairly beaming. "How are you?" he asked in a cheerful bass voice, as he extended his hand to his friend. "First rate, how are you?" "Splendid! Do you know"—here he dropped his voice in a confidential key—"I've been given the use for life of a half-million-dollar estate?" "You have?" asked the other man in astonishment. "Yes; the public library."—Light.

☞ One of the most singular facts about the growth of London is its regularity. It may be roughly taken that every month about a thousand houses were added to London. In August of this year 765,577 houses had to be supplied by the water companies with water; in September that number had increased to 766,797. In August of last year 744,464 houses had to be supplied, or, 11,113 below the number in the same month of this year. In September of this year the companies had the supply 10,976 houses more than in September of 1889. This extension is not confined to any one portion of the capital, but a perference is still being shown for the north and northwest suburbs.

QUEER SECT. There is a sect in Pennsylvania called the Reformed Presbyterians, but it is not likely to increase in membership to any extent. It holds the exercise of the right of suffrage to be a sin on the ground that God has no place in the constitution of the United States. Seven young men who did vote at the last election have been expelled by a church council on the charge of heresy, and the action may lead to the disruption of the sect.

Sheriff's Sale.

NORFOLK, SS. December 20, 1890.

BY Virtue of an execution which issued on a judgment in favor of Benjamin Johnson, of said Quincy, recovered against John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, of Quincy, at the Superior Court or this County, I have taken all the right that John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, had on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1890, that being the date the same was attached on mesne process, to a certain real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows:

A certain lot of land on West street, in said Quincy bounded northwesterly on West street thirty-five (35) feet; northeasterly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask one hundred and seventy (170) feet; southeasterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale two hundred (200) feet, as the stone wall runs; southwesterly on land now or late of John Wolfe two hundred and fifty (250) feet. Being a part of the premises conveyed to Edward V. Trask by deed of Charles H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 500, fol. 556, and by said Trask conveyed to John Reichart, by deed dated Feb. 2, 1888.

Also I have taken all the right in equity that John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, had on the 25th day of September, A. D. 1890, to redeem a certain mortgaged real estate lying in said Quincy and bounded and described as follows, viz: Northerly on other land now or late of Edward V. Trask ninety-five (95) feet; easterly on land now or late of Jeremiah Nightingale eighty-eight (88) feet; southerly on land of the same and of the said Edward V. Trask fifty-eight (58) feet, the angle of the easterly and southerly bound being marked by a birch tree; westerly on land now or late of said Trask one hundred and fifty (150) feet. The above described land being a part of the premises conveyed to said Trask by deed of C. H. Hardwick, dated Sept. 29, 1883, and recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 550, fol. 556, and by him conveyed to John Reichart by deed dated March 16 1888, recorded with Norfolk Deeds, lib. 579, fol 230.

Said last mentioned and described lot of land being the same described in a mortgage deed thereof from John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, to Joseph H. Vogel for eight hundred dollars, and recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds for said County, lib. 579, fol. 231; also in the mortgage deed thereof from John Reichart, otherwise known as John Richards, to E. H. Doble et al. for two hundred dollars, and recorded in the said Registry of Deeds, lib. 601, fol. 344, and on the 30th day of January next, at two o'clock in the afternoon, at my residence off Franklin street in said Quincy, I shall offer for sale to the highest bidder, at public auction, all your right and title in and to said first described and bounded lot of land, and also at the same time the aforesaid right in equity of redemption, to satisfy said execution and all fees and charges of sale.

Poetry.

Better Than Gold.

Better than grandeur, better than gold,
Than rank and titles a thousand fold,
Is a healthy body and a mind at ease,
And simple pleasures that always please,
A heart that can feel for another's woe,
And share its joys with a genial glow,
With sympathies large enough to enfold
All men as brothers, is better than gold.

Better than gold is a conscience clear,
Though toiling for bread in an humble sphere,
Doubly blest with content and health,
Untired by the lusts of care and wealth;
Lowly living and lofty thought
Adorn and ennoble a poor man's cot,
For mind and morals in nature's plan
Are the genuine tests of a gentleman.

Better than gold is the sweetest repose
Of the sons of toil when their labors close;
Better than gold is the poor man's sleep,
And the balm that drops on his slumbers deep,
Bring sleeping draught to the aching bed
Where luxury pillows its downy head,
His simple opiate deems
A shorter road to the land of dreams.

Better than gold is a thinking mind
That in the realms of books can find
A treasure surpassing Australian ore,
And live with the great and good of yore,
The sage's lord and the poet's lay,
The glories of the empire pass away;
The world's great dream will thus unfold
And yields a pleasure better than gold.

Better than gold is a peaceful home,
When all the fireside characters come.
The shine of love, the heaven of life,
Hallowed by mother, or sister, or wife.
However-humble the home may be,
Or tried with sorrow by heaven's decree,
The blessings that never were bought or sold,
And center there are better than gold.

Miscellany.

FROM DOOR TO DOOR.

BY HELEN FORREST GRAVES.

Mabel Mellen sat pensively before the blazing coal fire, with Pug in her lap and two very decided tears in her soft brown eyes. Her pink Watteau wrapper was very becoming, and her pet rose-bush in the window was just coming into bloom; but these facts were no consolation. All the same, Mabel was very unhappy.

"My dear," said the sage elder sister, who was all the mother she had ever known, "I wouldn't fret about it!"

Mabel raised the liquid brown eyes, fringed around with dark lashes.

"But I am sure," said she, "that he preached directly at me. Oh, I don't think he should have done that!"

"Nonsense, my dear!" said Sue.

One of the big round drops detached itself from the curly lashes, and fell, with a plash, directly on Pug's fine, shelf-like nose.

"What else would he have me do?" remonstrated Mabel, piteously. "I belong to all the societies, don't I? And I go to all the services, and I visit every one of the poor in my district. Does he want me to go to Africa and be a missionary, I wonder? Or join a sisterhood, and wear a horrid black night-cap over my hair, and go about without speaking to anybody?"

"I'm quite sure that he don't want anything of the sort," said Sue, gently.

"I'm ready to make any sacrifice," said Mabel, unconsciously tweaking Pug's wrinkly ears in her enthusiasm, until that much enduring beast uttered a yelp of anguish. "It isn't work that I'm afraid of. Didn't I wash all the little Riley children's faces last week for the mission school, and mend Johnny Ruttkay's horrid clothes so he could go to the anniversary? And I'm sure I only want the chance to be a heavenly Una, or a gray nun, or a pilgrimess, or any of those people that give up their whole lives for the cause of humanity. I'd do anything to help my fellow creatures—yes anything!"

Mabel's lips quivered and an involuntary tremole came into her voice.

Sue gazed admiringly at her.

"I'm sure you would, my darling," said she. "And now if you feel inclined for a good walk, you might take a glass of jelly around to old Betsy Blundell, in Charcoal street."

"It's a shame," she said to herself, "for any one to expect that sweet human blossom to work any harder than she does. I do wish Mr. Rockingham would leave off preaching those harrowing sermons."

Old Betsy Blundell was as deaf and as cross as ever. It was always a tribulation to go and see Betsy. Nothing suited her, and the element of gratitude was apparently left out of her nature.

She glared at Mabel as if she were an emissary of the Evil One.

"That last tea you left tasted smoky!" snarled she; "and I'm mortal certain the rice was damaged. I may be a poor creetur, but that ain't no reason I should be p'isoned. Jelly? Wal, I s'pose you may leave it, though there ain't much nourishment in such kickshaws. Lou'sy she's kind o' complainin', and maybe she'll eat it."

"Is Louisa sick?"

Mabel turned quickly around to the battered old couch at the other side of the room, where a pleasant-faced girl of about twenty lay, covered with a faded blanket shawl.

"Oh, it ain't much, Miss Mellen," said Louisa—"only rheumatism. But it cripples me so I can't move off the couch, and I'd just got a bushel o' them tippets and capes knitted, all ready to carry around to the doors and sell—a dozen of each. I'd put all my money into the material, and I think they'd a' sold well. I used to get up nights and knit 'em, after factory hours.'

"Is it hard to sell them?" Mabel suddenly asked.

"Oh, no, miss," Louisa responded. "It's real light, pleasant work. 'Twould ha' been nothing but fun for me."

Mabel breathed quick and fast. Two red spots came out on her cheek; brown lightnings flashed under the curly gateways of her eyes.

Here was the opportunity at last—coming it was true, in no poetic guise, surrounded by no attractive circumstances, but an opportunity all the same.

"Louisa," said she, "I will sell them for you."

"You, Miss Mellen?"

"Yes. Why not?" said Mabel, with a curious, little dry laugh. "I had a stall once in a fancy fair. Why shouldn't I sell tippets and capes and mittens? I'll go out with the basket this very day. Are the prices all marked?"

She did not even consult Sue, this impetuous, impulsive child of one idea.

"Sue will be sure to oppose the plan," said she. "There'll be a thousand-and-one good and sufficient reasons why I shouldn't undertake the good work. I will be a heroine! I will practice what Mr. Rockingham preaches! Where's the use of all my good resolutions if I haven't the moral courage to face an emergency like this?"

So she took the splint-basket and started bravely out into the raw, chill atmosphere of the November day with a valiant heart.

"It will be fun," she assured herself; but nevertheless the two red spots glowed hotter still in her cheeks, and there came a suspicious fluttering under her belt-buckle, when she rang the bell of the nearest house in the hundrum little red-brick row that she had selected for the scene of her first triumphs.

"Madam," as the door opened, not quite three-quarters of an inch, and a purple nose, surmounted by a dirty lace cap, became faintly visible in the crevice "will you allow me to show you—"

"I don't never buy nothing at the door!" shrilly answered the owner of the purple nose.

So Mabel tried the next door-knob.

A spectacled old woman, with a double chin and a big cameo brooch, bounced suddenly out at her.

"Woolen shoulder-capes?" said she. "Wa'al, I dunno. What ye ask for 'em? Lemme have a look. Mittens? La! I shouldn't think there'd be no wear to them things. Ef ye'll leave some of the comforters till my son Zeke comes home to try 'em on, I might make a sale for ye."

"Oh, I couldn't do that!" gasped Mabel.

"Oh!" said the old woman with a toss of her head that had nearly unsettled the spectacles. "Ain't willin' to trust me, eh? Wall, then, I guess ye'd better go long."

And she shut the door in Miss Mellen's face.

Third customer apparent bawled out from the back kitchen that "she didn't want anything."

The fourth was a tall, sallow-faced woman, who read Mabel a lecture on the propriety of giving up this gadding-about-the-streets business and taking up some creditable work.

The girl was beginning to feel weak-kneed and trembling now, the rose-spots on her cheeks had widened into a decided flush all over her face, and she winced before the sallow-faced female's harsh words as if they had been blows.

"I haven't sold an article—not one!" murmured Mabel, ruefully viewing the tumbled contents of her basket. "Oh, dear! And I am so tired, and it makes me feel so ashamed when those people talk so at me, and stare so rudely and slam the door in my face. But—oh, dear, this isn't being a heroine!"

With a resolute rallying of her quailing spirits, she ran up the steps of a ruinous wooden house and rang. An untidy woman bawled at her out of the window overhead:

"Why don't you pull the bell wire out while you're about it? Don't ye know there's a sick woman in the house?"

Almost at the same moment the door opened.

"Don't sass the lady, Mariar," said a smooth, oily voice.

And a sinister-eyed man projected his disagreeable visage almost close to hers.

"Eh? Woosted goods for sale—tippits and knit gloves? Just precisely what I'm a-wantin', my dear. Oh, yes, I'll buy anything such a pretty girl has to sell! Set the basket down here, and allow me—"

But Mabel jerked away the basket, of which he fain would have relieved her, and with burning face and tumultuously throbbing breast ran away down the street, never pausing until she came so violently in contact with an umbrella coming around the corner that the basket, with its contents, was scattered over the pavement, already wet and muddy with the raw autumn rain.

"I beg your pardon," she sobbed, "but—"

Why, Miss Mellen, what are you running away from?" cried a deep, cheerful bass.

"Mr. Rockingham!"

And then Mabel burst out crying.

It was not until the mittens, capes and comforters were all gleaned off the pavement and returned to their original place, and Mabel was sitting, chilled, shivering and sobbing at intervals, like a grieved child, in front of the fire in the pastor's study, that he began to comprehend the true nature of affairs.

"It's no use trying," said Mabel. "I'm not a heroine, and I never shall be one. I thought I was going to do a good work, but I haven't; I've only made a fool of myself and spoiled all poor Louisa Blundel's things, and in my heart I'm full of envy, hatred, malice and all uncharitableness! Oh, why did you preach that sermon at me?"

"I, Mabel? Preach at you!"

"I know I'm awfully wicked!" sobbed the girl. "I can't ever be a saint or a m-missionary, and I'm not fit to come to church and say my prayers with other people—I, that can't do the simplest good work! And I know you meant me when you talked about unprofitable servants, and—"

"Mabe!—dear little Mabel—hush! Listen to me!" gently urged Mr. Rockingham.

"If you're going to scold at me—"

But as her big, brown, tear-drenched eyes met his, a sudden dumbness smote her; the piteously gesticulating hands fell into her lap, and she shrank back into the shadows.

"I—I don't understand!" said she.

"But it was strange," Mabel declared, an hour afterward, in recounting the whole story to faithful Sue "how I could ever be so blind! And it's stranger still that he should love me so dearly! Such an idiotic little failure as I've proved myself! Say, Sue, do you think I'm half good enough for him?"

"Certainly I do," said Sue.

"Do you think"—putting her face very close to the elder sister's—"that I shall make a good minister's wife?"

"He thinks so," said Sue, "And that's enough."

Papa—"Come here, Toddlekins. Whom does papa love better than any one else in the world?

Toddlekins—"Papa."

Laws for a Successful Life.

Just a word to you, young friends! We all envy successful people, but till it is too late we do not all learn that there are laws which control a successful life—laws which we have only to obey if we would prevent disastrous failure.

Let us consider a few of those commandments to which God and nature have attached the promise of a crown.

1. First of all be resolute. Where there is a will, there is a way. Determination makes men giants for good or monsters for evil. Make up your mind what to do, and be sure it is worth doing; and then do it. Do not be dismayed at obstacles. They are stumbling stones to the weak and vacillating, but stepping stones to the courageous and resolute.

2. Be persevering. Choosing a lawful, laudable object in life, stick to it.

3. Be industrious. You can never drift into success, but you may climb to lofty heights.

4. Be thorough. What is worth doing is worth doing well. The peril of all is learning to do too easily what we attempt. We get careless—superficial. We make a show of progress without any real acquisition—it is a thin gold plating over a common metal; we are tempted to say over a good deal of brass.

5. Be systematic. This is the only way to be thorough. Life must be laid out on a definite plan. Method is like a mechanical appliance; it makes up for lack of power by teaching us how to use what power we have. Defects of imagination, of memory, and even of reasoning power, may be supplied by systematic habits. A certain French minister of great business qualities has been curiously contrasted with a shiftless English statesman thus:

One never put off till the morrow what he could do today; the other never did today what he could put off till tomorrow.

6. Be economical. Economy means wise administration, avoiding waste and using well what we have. Economy of money is at the bottom of personal peace and household plenty. Very few are there who, if they choose, could not be rich by and by. The five cents a day spent for cigars would, in the course of a lifetime, if it were saved, come, by compound interest to a snug little fortune and bless old age with competency. I heard a sagacious employer say of a very gifted salesman; "I would make that man a partner, but he spends all his earnings on dress." Economy may be applied to anything which is ours in trust for good uses. We should be saving of time—one of the most valuable of all God's gifts. As money is wasted in pennies, so time is wasted in minutes.

7. Be self-sacrificing. Do not hesitate to pay the price of success even if it costs much of self denial. There is no prize without its price. Palissy, the potter, was so enthusiastic in his study to perfect his porcelain wares that he forgot food, drink, and sleep He spent all his money and then burned his garden paling, household tables and furniture to keep up the furnace fires that were to melt the enamel. He was so absorbed in his work that, like Poussa, the Chinese potter, he would have thrown himself into the furnace rather than fail in his life work. In all life's noblest achievements it is still true that we save life only by losing it. The highest virtue is self-sacrifice, and the grandest results are reached only at the cost of self-denial; but when the crown shines on the brow, the way to the cross will be forgotten. A true success will compensate for all the trials through which it has been attained. —Arthur T. Pierson, D. D., in Palmer Journal.

Another Weather Prophet.

H. L. Tuttle, who lives in a somewhat elevated part of North Adams, Mass., has long been known among the people of that section as a weather prophet, says the New York Sun. He is more than three score and ten years old, and has been a close observer of the weather for forty years. It is common for those making up driving and excursion parties to consult him before fixing a date for their pleasure. He has never even allowed his predictions to be printed in the local papers. He predicted the famous yellow day ten years ago, the cold winter of 1866, 1876, 1881, 1888 and the memorable blizzard of March of that year.

Mr. Tuttle said that the present winter would be cold and dry, with a moderate amount of snow. He says the thermometer will run the lowest about January 31, and that 20 degrees below will be reached. According to him snow will remain on the ground continually until the first of April. He basis his predictions on the state of the weather when the sun "crosses the line" in September and March. He said, "If the wind is in the northwest when the sun crosses in September and March. He said, "If the wind is in the northeast when the sun crosses in September you may be assured of a warm fall, followed by a very extreme winter. If, on the other hand, the wind is in the southeast, look out for an open winter. The storms have only one place in which they start, and that is in the southwest, south of the sun. A storm can never start from north of the sun. If you see a cloud north of the sun it will amount to nothing. If you observe a cloud south of the sun then you may know mischief is in the air. Then you must take into consideration the color of the cloud. When it has a yellowish hue it is a snow cloud. When it is dark and black a rain storm is brewing. Again, when the cloud is mixed, it will be a storm of wind. Of course I have many other signs, resulting from my years of observation."

News Publication.

"The New Method" is the title of a small book received by us some time ago by the Health Publishing Company of 710 Broadway, New York. We did not read it until recently supposing it to be of that class of health literature of which there is so much floating about the country. We have read the book several times and handed it to others to read. Medicine is not mentioned and the subjects treated are, dyspepsia, jaundice and biliousness, constipation, kidney diseases, nervousness, catarrh, piles, incipient consumption, headache, chronic and acute rhuematism, emaciation, corpulence and miscellaneous notes. The treatments are simple but sensible and worthy of the notice of any person suffering from any of the above complaints. It is written by W. E. Forrest, B. S., M. D., of the N. Y. Academy of Medicine, Medical Society of County of N. Y. and N. Y. Medical Union.

Love, Fright and Clam Shells.

How easy it is for a man to "fly to pieces" in an emergency.

A few days ago I saw an occurrence on the street of a large town in this state that was as wildly exhilarating to the bystanders as it was to the participants bitterly humiliating.

A fine appearing young man was accompanying an elegantly attired young woman in a promenade about town. All at once an enormous dog darted from the open door of an eating house and, in full pursuit of a cat, dashed fairly against the lady mentioned above.

She fell prone upon the sidewalk in a fainting fit. Her escort, in a veritable paroxysm of helpless fright, danced frantically about, while the proprietor of the restaurant ran to the lady and raised her head.

"Water, some one!" shouted the saloon man.

Here was where the panicky escort saw a good opportunity to distinguish himself.

Like a flash he darted inside the restaurant and seized upon a bucket placed near the door. He dashed back to the street, and with the idiocy that fear inspires in some, threw the heaping contents of the bucket over the face and form of the handsomely dressed lady.

That bucket was filled with clam shells and table refuse!

The match has been declared off, but a speedier recovery from a faint would never have followed the water cure.—Lewiston Journal.

He Never Thought of It.

When Henry M. Stanley lectured in Scranton an informal reception was held and many people availed themselves of the opportunity of shaking the explorer's hand. Among the number was Mr. E. E. Hendrick, a wealthy manufacturer of Carbondale, who stopped and said: "Mr. Stanley, one of the things in your book, 'In Darkest Africa,' that interested me most was your vivid account of the sufferings of your party in 'Starvation Camp,' but one thing I could never understand. When your men were dying for want of food, why didn't they fish, since they were so near the river?" Mr. Stanley's face was a study. He looked at his questioner as if dazed by a blow. "Why!" he exclaimed, and then hesitated in evident surprise and consternation for several moments; "why, I don't believe any one ever thought of it." The hero of the Dark Continent, who has commanded admiration because he knew so often just what to do at critical times, confesses that with food within his reach he did not see it when starving. Mr. Hendrick moved on with the parting injunction: "Mr. Stanley, the next time you form an exploring party, take a Yankee with you."—New York Tribune.

Superior to the English Article.

"Ah, my boy, what kind of blacking do you use?" asked a young Englishman of the Duquesne bootblack yesterday. "You can get a good polish everywhere in America, you know, but I can't get it in England. My boy at home can't make my boots shine as you do."

"No," answered the boy, "England is not in it—when it comes to blacking boots. We are at the top of the heap."

"Ah, and what do you mean by 'top of the heap'—American slang, I suppose?"

"Right you are. Better take me with you when you go back, give me a good salary and I will see that your shoes always shine like that," as he gave them the finishing touches and yelled for the "next gent."

"Even the bootblacks have the money fever here," sighed the Londoner as he sauntered away. "Great country this! 'In it'—'top of the heap'—well, I like that. Something new, you know."—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Care of the Eyes.

Said an oculist: "If you are troubled with your eyes it will not be sufficient for you to have your eyes carefully examined by a specialist, and then get your glasses and think you are all right. You may be careful to wear glasses whenever you are using your eyes, but this is not enough. You must, in order to keep them in good condition and to be able to rely upon them have them examined as often as you do your teeth.

"No sensible man thinks that when a good dentist has put his teeth in order he has nothing more to fear. He goes to his dentist once every year, perhaps oftener. And so with his oculist. He should consult him at regular intervals. If his eyes have not grown weaker, or if they have not changed in other ways, he is assured of the fact, and may use them accordingly. If the slightest change in glasses is required he is warned of this, and is able to nip a new evil in the bud.—New York Tribune.

Are Draughts Dangerous?

Now is the time of year, says the London Lancet, when windows are closed up to keep out draughts. Just the contrary should be adopted, it says. Where the body is not overheated the draught caused by the ordinary incoming of air will do infinitely less harm than the impure air caused by closed windows. The way to enjoy pure air in cold weather is to turn on the heat when the room gets cold, not shut up the windows. Heat was invented for use. If the room becomes too warm don't turn off the heat, but open the windows. By that means a person who knows anything about ventilation can have an equable, summer-like atmosphere about him all winter long. The necessity of open windows is doubly apparent where tobacco smoke is indulged in, as the smoke is dangerous to the breathing apparatus and makes it liable to pulmonic troubles.

The Advantages of Conversation.

The most agreeable way of getting information is by conversation. If you talk with a well-informed person, who can express clearly his ideas on any subject in which you are interested, you can go over the subject until you thoroughly understand it, and search out in this way, in the mind of another, a thing which you earnestly desire to know, you are more likely to remember it and to profit by it. This is why a competent teacher is better than any text-book. Besides, talk inspires both the speaker and the listener—the one becomes more eager to know and the other more eager to communicate.—St. Nicholas.

Letter from Brooklyn, N. Y.

The new Brooklyn Tabernacle on Clinton avenue, the Beacon street of the city, is to be dedicated at Easter. Services have been held for some weeks in the spacious chapel by the Sunday school. The Friday night lectures are given there. Last week the theme was the Historian Bancroft. Dr. Talmage was present at the obsequies, and remarked that—

"All this honor was paid to one who was the son of a Congregationalist clergyman, and who, by his own genius and force of will, had risen to fame and eminence.

"He had commanded respect as a diplomatist at the Courts of St. James and Berlin, and earned fame for himself in the Cabinets of his native country, whose early history his pen has rescued from oblivion. He was one of those who dispelled the idea, common at one time in Europe, that American literature and history were impossibilities. Particularly significant among the tributes of respect that decorated his coffin was a wreath placed there by Count Arco Valley, the German Minister, through command of his imperial master. In Bancroft we see that extension of life which the present age witnesses so often, especially in men of marked ability. The Emperor William of Germany was a very old man at the time of his death, William E. Gladstone is an octogenarian. Oliver Wendell Holmes and John G. Whittier are both aged, and both still endowed with all their matchless mental faculties. The age of man is gradually lengthening. The sixties are today what the fifties were a century ago, the seventies what the sixties were, and the eighties are equal to the seventies. Centenarians will soon be as common as septuagenarians."

The vital statistics of this city are just published. The population is 853,945, death rate 23.22 while New York city has 25.20 and Boston 23.96. Not a single death from small pox occurred. The four diseases that lead are pneumonia, phthisis, cholera infantum and bronchitis, aggregating a third of all the deaths.

Yesterday from forty-one pulpits the Y. M. C. Association sent forth its plea, thus reaching thousands whereby a single annual service at its rooms it used to reach a few hundred hearers. The advantages of the association are offered at prices from two to fifteen dollars a year.

The Brooklyn Free Library, 568 Atlantic avenue, is the only absolutely free institution and as a Director I invite any young man coming from New England to make our acquaintance. We have 7000 volumes on our shelves and fifty papers and periodicals on our tables, with a bright monthly sheet as an exponent of our work. Evening classes twice a week are held and a debating society every Saturday night.

A chinese hospital is in operation, 45 Hicks street in charge of a native who recently graduated with honor from the L. I. Cottage hospital. Ah Sun, who became a Christian some years ago while studying with Mrs. Thwing, and in 1887 welcomed her to his home in China and greeted her there again in 1889, writes to America that he has now built a Christian sanctuary at his own personal expense where she can teach "the doctrine" and live when she returns to China as she hopes to next year with a daughter. A son also returns to labor there permanently. Two brothers of this influential Christian farmer are Christians. His son also joined a Brooklyn church and fell a victim of pneumonia last winter. When dying he wished to be put on his knees to spend his last moments in prayer to God his Saviour.

Facts like these show the fruitfulness of mission work on both sides the Pacific and answer the query so often put in a scornful tone, "Are pagans ever made Christians?"

The Wife of the Great Showman.

In appearance she is a trifle under medium height, with a figure slightly inclined to matronly stoutness, which she carries with an erectness and poise gained from long years of physical culture. Her complexion is English in its purity and beauty, her hair dark and her eyes gray. She possesses also "that excellent thing in woman," a voice purely English in its sweetness and tone.

Mrs. Barnum's pet hobby—at least, so says her husband, laughingly indulgent—is her indefatigable pursuit of bric-a-brac, and most beautiful examples of her success in this pursuit, with the numerous mementoes of its master's varied career, make of "Marina" a home worth the having. It is the family home during most of the year, though a part of each winter is spent in New York for the purpose of attending the opera and theatres, of which both husband and wife are equally fond, and occasional visits are paid elsewhere.

Mrs. Barnum possesses to an unusual degree a liking for society and entertaining which makes of her the most delightful of hostesses. Her dinners are models, the easy grace and cordial hospitality of their hostess adding much to their enjoyment. Herself a brilliant conversationalist, she attracts, in turn, people of unusual intellect and brilliancy, and her most honored guests are apt to be either literary or musical people, as these she finds more specially congenial. For Mrs. Barnum, though modestly confessing only to a great liking for music, is a musician of some skill, and though no persuasion has as yet induced her to write over her own name, she is an able and fluent writer. She proves a most valuable and efficient aid to her husband in his numerous charities, such assistance as she renders being always given anonymously or under cover of Mr. Barnum's name.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

If Not. Why Not?

In soap, as in every other article of merchandise, the profits are largest on the inferior articles, and it is but human nature for the groceryman to put those later out whenever he can. A good and economical housekeeper, knowing this, does not content herself with ordering up "some soap" but she says: "Mr. Allspice, put me up half dozen of Brussels soap, and if you have not got it—get it. I don't care for other than Brussels. It's economical."

Report of School Committee.

We have been permitted to review the forthcoming annual report of the School Committee of 1890. After a page of introductory it comes to the vital question of school accommodations in West Quincy.

Concerning the Willard schoolhouse the report will say:—"The erection of the new schoolhouse in West Quincy goes on slowly. To further complicate matters, Foresters' hall which had been used as a temporary school room, was recently destroyed by fire, rendering it necessary to discover and in one sense create new quarters. After some difficulty a portion of Farnum's block, formerly used as a shoe store, was secured and the school which had been driven out by fire was installed therein.

The sagacity of our superintendent has triumphed over many obstacles, but the shameful fact remains that the children of this district are woful sufferers by reason of the delay encountered in the completion of the new building. A singular and what seems to us an unwise provision of the city charter has placed under the control of the Commissioner of Public Works, the erection of all school edifices, a task which under the town form of government usually entered into the regular duties of the School board. Consequently at the meeting held on March 30, 1889, the School committee sent to the City Council a communication embodying its views upon the character of the new building, it of its functions, and since that date it has been reduced to a state of passive observation, having neither warrant or power to hasten the completion of the new structure.

In common with all citizens who have at heart the welfare of our children we greatly deplore the existing state of things in West Quincy, but we wish the people of this city to thoroughly understand that no shadow of responsibility for it can fall upon the school board.

In view of recent experience we respectfully suggest to our citizens the consideration of the question whether it would not be desirable to make at some future day such a change in the charter as would put matters of this sort under the supervision of the School Committee, as being that branch of the city government most closely interested in school affairs, and therefore most competent to accomplish the object desired.

The report also calls attention to the pressing necessity for

More School Accommodations

in Ward Three, the Adams and John Hancock buildings, both being overcrowded. No recommendations however are made.

The radical change in the High school also receives a paragraph, which notes an improvement.

The committee state that no definite conclusion has been reached relative to consolidating the High school, Adams Academy and Woodward Seminary.

The introduction of elementary science or nature study will, it thought, be a lasting benefit to the scholars, quickening their perceptive powers and greatly enlarging in them, the domain of thought.

Amendments to the Liquor Law.

There will be a public hearing at the State House on Monday, Feb. 9, at 10.30 A. M., relative to amending section 9 of chapter 100 of the Public Statutes, so as to allow the delivery of liquor by an innholder or common victualler from a counter or other structure adapted to the purpose; also, on the recommendation of Gov. Russell upon the same subject.

On Monday, Feb. 16, at 10.30 A. M., at the State House, there will also be a hearing relative to increasing the number of places licensed for the sale of intoxicating liquors.

The temperance citizens of Quincy should be up and doing, and not allow favorable reports on these amendments, unless they believe them to be for the best interest of the State. Certainly there seems to be enough places now, in every city where licenses are granted, without increasing the number, both for the dealers and drinkers. The Milford Journal, in speaking on this subject, says:

"The question of liquor license is bound to play a prominent part in the present State Legislature. It was for this the great campaign fund was raised last year by the Boston liquor dealers' association. The intention was to capture not only the governorship, but both branches of the Legislature. The first succeeded, the Senate is a tie, while in the House there is an undoubted majority for any so-called "relief" the liquor dealers may ask for, and any such legislation would be altogether likely to encounter none but favoring gales in the Senate.

"We look to see the 'closed bar' feature wiped out, and with it the section allowing adjoining owners of property to object to a license issuing, and the ratio of population necessary for a license materially cut down, if not entirely done away with, as a means of getting rid of the present high license system and accompanying fees. In a word, we expect to find the Legislature enacting into law any requests the managers of the liquor interest may ask for."

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Rev. Luther Freeman of Wollaston, delivered a very able address to the young men at the meeting last Sunday afternoon. The quartette from Boston University sang a few familiar hymns, and congregational singing was led by Mr. T. B. Pollard.

The third district convention of the Y. M. C. A., of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, was held at Woburn last week and the following delegates from Quincy attended:—Messrs. H. W. Pinkham, T. B. Pollard, R. S. Elliott, C. F. Brown, and G. H. Brown.

The gospel service next Sunday afternoon will be held by students from Harvard University. A cordial invitation is extended to all young men to attend these meetings.

The Y. M. C. A. Committee have received quite a large number of applications for membership. Most of the applicants desire gymnasium privileges, and if the new building, which it is rumored we are to have soon, is erected, the association will probably be able to secure suitable rooms for its purposes.

CITY COUNCIL.

All the members of the City Council were present at the adjourned meeting Monday evening, but the death of one of the members cast a gloom in the chamber. Immediately after the roll call President Thompson announced the death of Councilman Samuel H. Spear which had occurred that morning.

Upon motion of Councilman Duffield, it was voted that only imperative business should be transacted, and that after the adoption of resolutions the Council adjourn out of respect.

Standing Committees.

President Thompson announced the following standing committees. It will be noticed that some are not full, but there are three vacancies in the Council:

Finance, Accounts, State Aid, Claims and Salaries,—Councilmen Morton, Hayward, Pratt and Fallon; (one vacancy.)

Contracts, Streets, Ways, Sidewalks, Bridges and Lights,—Councilmen Jones, Holden, Drake, Warner, Powers, Bryant and Pope.

Public Buildings and Grounds,—Councilmen Moxon, Bryant and Little.

Sewers and Drains,—Councilmen Newcomb, Bass, Duffield, Warner, Hammond and Sherman; (one vacancy.)

Fire Department and Police,—Councilmen Bass, Roberts, Little and Drake; (one vacancy.)

Ordinances, Licenses, Printing, Rules and Orders,—Councilmen Sherman, Pope and Hammond.

Health, Poor and Bonds,—Councilmen Powers and Pratt; (one vacancy.)

Legislative Matters, Elections, Returns, —Councilmen Duffield, Morton and Moxon.

Street Sprinkling.

A communication from Mayor Fairbanks notified the Council of a Legislative hearing for Thursday, Jan. 29, at 11 A. M., on order permitting cities to assess abutters for street sprinkling. Referred to Committee on Legislative matter.

Election Returns.

Upon motion of Councilman Bass the Committee on Election was instructed to meet at City hall Tuesday evening to receive returns of the special election.

City Book.

The order appropriating $700 for printing 1000 copies of the annual reports was passed to be ordained.

The Williard Schoolhouse.

The order ratifying the Mayor's action in taking possession of the unfinished Willard schoolhouse came up for adoption.

Upon request of Councilman Sherman, Mayor Fairbanks enlightened the Council on the subject. He did not wish to go into details and have it get into the newspapers, but he had had a conference with the bondsmen, and they were satisfied and had told him to go ahead with the building and they would stand behind him. The creditors had today served a legal notice on the city, claiming all the materials in and about the building, but this was a legal question. He proposed to commence work tomorrow, and hoped to have the building completed before Sept. 1.

Councilman Fallon queried who would have to stand the loss because of the imperfect drawings, the city or the architect, and proceeded to explain some.

Mayor Fairbanks said that Commissioner Ewell had placed the building in charge of Jonas Shackley.

The order was adopted.

The order appropriating $10,000 additional for the building (to be repaid by the bondsmen) was passed to be ordained.

In Memory of Councilman Spear.

Councilman Duffield offered the following resolutions which were ananimously adopted by a rising vote:

RESOLVED, That the members of the Council have heard with deep regret of the sudden death of their fellow Councilman, Samuel H. Spear.

RESOLVED, That in his death the city of Quincy has sustained the loss of a good citizen and an upright public servant.

RESOLVED, That his chair be draped in mourning for the period of thirty days.

RESOLVED, That a copy of these resolutions with the offered sympathy of the Council, be sent to his bereaved family, and that a copy of the same be spread upon the journal.

President Thompson appointed Councilman Bass, Morton and Holden a committee of the Council to attend the funeral on Wednesday.

At 8.15 the Council adjourned.

City Hall Notes.

Superintendent of Streets Spencer tendered his resignation, to take effect last Saturday, and the same was accepted by Commissioner Ewell.

Miss Tilly Nightingale has accepted the position of clerk in the office of the Commissioner of Public Works, and entered upon her duties Monday. She is a stenographer and typewriter.

The flag was at half mast on City Hall in respect to Councilman Samuel H. Spear, who died Monday morning.

Commissioner Ewell is receiving many kind words for that plank sidewalk leading to the Quincy depot. They hope he may be able to carry out the permanent improvements later.

Commissioner Ewell informs the PATRIOT representatives that he intends to be Superintendent of Streets himself, now that Mr. Spencer has resigned. He will employ only foremen of labor.

John N. Fox, formerly superintendent of the Quincy Home, has been engaged as foreman of street laborers, and was at work with gangs the first of the week opening the gutters.

Now that the walk is near City Hall, there is a necessity for snow guards on the roof to protect pedestrians.

It is a little singular that the late Councilman Spear, and the late Councilman Barker who died in office in 1889, should both have had the same desk in the Council chamber, No. 19.

Dentists' Banquet.

There is to be tendered a banquet in New York today, to seventeen dentists, who have been in the practice of their profession for nearly fifty years. They represent nearly all sections of the United States, and they are those who stand today at the head.

The opportunity of seeing, and meeting so many of those identified with the early history of dentistry in America, is without precedent, and will be of great interest. A. H. Gilson of Quincy has received an invitation to be present and to be one to represent the present generation of the profession from Boston. He left last night and will return on Monday.

☞ The Boston Primary Union of Sunday School Teachers will hold an Institute at Berkeley Temple, Boston, commencing Monday, Feb. 2, at 2.30 o'clock. Interesting and helpful addresses on the best methods of teaching and training the younger scholars will be delivered by practical, progressive teachers. Supper will be served at 6 o'clock, under the auspices of the Congregational Superintendents' Union, followed by addresses at 7 P. M., by Dr. Gumbart of Roxbury, and lesson teaching by Miss Harlow of Lowell. The public are cordially invited to attend both services.

The Sailors' Home.

On Nov. 9, 1864, a fair, or, to speak more definitely, a series of fairs were opened in Boston for the purpose of raising money to found a home for disabled seamen of the United States navy, similar to the Sailors' Snug Harbor, which was founded in 1831 by Capt. Richard R. Randall on Staten Island, N. Y., for the merchant marine.

Its objects were thus briefly set forth in the official programme: "According to the rules of our service, those who are suffering or invalided from wounds or incurable disease, can only remain a limited time in the hospitals, the exception being a service of twenty years. It follows that very many of this valuable class of citizens, who have braved every peril in defence of our flag, are, and will be, cast upon the world, helpless and without the means of support; for to those whose constitutions are broken by disease and exposure no pensions are allowed; and to those who are disabled by wounds, an entirely insufficient one for their support is granted. The establishment of a home for disabled seamen is imperatively called for by every obligation of justice and every instinct of humanity, in order to relieve the large amount of almost unrecognized destitution and misery even now pressing upon the friends of the sailor."

The officers of the managing committee were: Chairmen, Hon. Alexander H. Rice, Mrs. John A. Bates; vice chairman, Thomas Russell; treasurer, John A. Bates, paymaster U. S. N.; secretary, Mrs. S. T. Hooper.

The opening address was delivered by Edward Everett.

The fair proper was held in the Boston Theatre, and the visitors could attend almost any other exhibition in the city and still be within the circle of the great naval charity. The receipts were enormous, and were as follows:

Cash receipts from individuals, ships-of-war, etc.	$83,893 04
Sale of admission tickets	34,302 00
Sales at tables, stations, etc.	164,175 86
	$282,370 90
Expenses, etc.	35,314 43
Total net receipts	$247,056 47

This was the nucleus of a fund from which, in due time, a National Sailors' Home was built. This is the institution which a certain Boston daily is noticing.

The Patriot's Inspection.

On Sunday morning a PATRIOT representative visited the Home and inspected it from garret to cellar. The writer has inspected a large number of public institutions including state prisons, houses of correction, hospitals, forts, etc., and has some idea as to how high a standard such an institution as the Sailors' Home should be kept.

All of the sleeping rooms were thoroughly inspected and they were found, with the contents, to be scrupulously clean. Each room, excepting those on the upper floor, contained two iron bedsteads with good mattresses and bed clothing, such as is found in any hotel. The floors were neatly painted and covered with rugs, and the walls and ceilings were kalsomined a very light blue. The floors were so clean that a white kid glove could be drawn across them without being soiled. The hall way, the chapel, in fact every room in the building had this same remarkably clean and ship shape appearance, such as is seldom found outside of a man-of-war.

The hospital is situated in the south end of the Home and is a large sunny room, well lighted and ventilated, and admirably suited for its purpose.

The Cemetery

about which so much talk was made is located on a knoll, washed by the waters of Quincy bay and beautified by a large grove of trees. Very few small country towns can boast of such a well kept and picturesque burial ground.

Steward Betts showed the writer through the kitchen. The food is as good, if not better, than that served at suburban hotels.

Money Matters.

Since writing the above, a letter has been received from Mr. Henry Sprague a former member of the Home. Mr. Sprague's letter is as follows:

TYSON, VT., Jan. 24, 1891.

James S. Whiting, Esq.,
Wollaston, Mass.,

MY DEAR SIR: While at the Sailors' Home at Quincy I had granted to me by an act of Congress, an additional pension of $20 per month, and a check was sent to me from the pension department for back pay to the amount of $51 directed to Quincy, Mass. Dr. Faxon, contrary to law, took the letter containing the check from the post office, opened it and then notified me of its receipt.

When I came to see about it, he (Dr. Faxon) said if I would endorse the check he would draw the money for me. He got the money from the bank and when I came for it he counted out one half of it and notified me he should keep the remainder. To this I objected, and stated to him that it was all my own, and that I should have the whole or none. After some hesitation he paid me the whole face of the check. I left the institution the next morning and came to my old home in Vermont.

The taking of letters from the office and opening them I believe is generally practiced by Dr. Faxon on all letters directed to inmates of the home.

If required I am ready to go before any authority having competent jurisdiction and make oath to the above facts.

Very respectfully yours,
HENRY SPRAGUE.

Dr. Faxon was shown the letter and said in reply:

For years the rule of the Home, made by the Trustees, has been that all pension money over $8 per month shall be surrendered to the institution and on quarter days I have had the checks cashed and given to the pensioner the balance coming to him. Sprague, on the first payment after his pension had been increased beyond $4 refused to abide by the rule. As the agreement was not a written one, I gave him the whole amount feeling, of course, that the old man was a swindler to that extent, taking advantage of a technicality.

The statement that letters to inmates are opened as described is absolutely untrue.

Wolkins Again.

Luther C. Wolkins, of Quincy fame, has showed up in Lynn, and, according to the Boston Herald, has swindled many in the city of shoes with whom he has had dealings. These include landlords and furniture dealers; also many persons whom he interested in his schemes.

The Herald says: Toward the latter part of last November a man, representing himself to be the treasurer of the "Equitable Trust Syndicate of Essex and Norfolk Counties," secured a two years' lease of rooms 5 and 6 in the Tucker building, 339 Union street, opposite the central depot, Lynn, a contract being entered whereby the lessee agreed to pay a monthly rental upon the basis of an annual payment of $500. These he furnished richly, expense not being considered. He then advertised in the daily papers, and proceeded to raise $80,000 on the installment plan for, as he represented, two large business blocks in Lynn and a hotel at Willoughby Park, West Gloucester. He made some improvements on the property enough to interest people with money, but now they want to know how to get it back, and the newspapers want pay for the advertisements.

☞ Massachusetts comes out first in density of population according to the census of the past year. Hitherto Rhode Island has led, but Superintendent Porter finds that our commonwealth has a population of 286 to a square mile, and Rhode Island only has 264, while New Jersey is third state and Connecticut the fourth.

People are still in suspense over the appointment of the heads of departments, which cannot be made public now until the next meeting, Feb. 2.

Special Election.

The result of the special election in this city Tuesday was a great surprise, especially the majority given for Roger H. Wilde, the Republican nominee, who failed of a re-election at the annual election because of a tie vote. The total vote was 1697, of which Mr. Wilde received 1011 and Mr. Duggan but 670.

The following summary shows the vote for each candidate, the total vote by wards and the number on the voting lists:

	Wilde's Vote.	Duggan's Vote.	Blanks.	Qualified Voters.	Vote Cast.
Ward One,	212	83	3	580	298
Ward Two,	145	96	1	479	239
Ward Three.	184	126	3	516	313
Ward Four,	175	260	3	642	438
Ward Five,	152	30	1	336	183
Ward Six,	143	78	5	272	226
	1011	670	16	2835	1697

In Ward Six.

Ward Six also balloted for a Ward Councilman, to fill the vacancy caused by the tie vote. The gentlemen who were tied were again the candidates, Louis Rinn, R., and Daniel C. Lyons, D. At the city election each had received 111 votes. The result yesterday was:

Total vote	226
Blank and defective,	2
Daniel C. Lyons had	106
Louis Rinn had	118
Rinn's plurality,	12

Councilman Spear.

Monday recorded the death of M. Samuel H. Spear, one of Quincy's most respected citizens. Two weeks after he was sworn in as a member of the City Council of 1891, and few, if any, thought him to be in poor health. He took to his bed, however, in a few days and he was found to be a sufferer from a cancer in the stomach. Unable to take any nourishment, his condition became serious and death ended his suffering about 7 o'clock Monday morning.

Mr. Spear was well known throughout the city, first as a sucessful business man, but later as postmaster of the city. He was appointed by President Cleveland in 1886, and made a model official. So popular was he with the people that the Republicans met with much opposition when they proposed a change. The contest of last year is still fresh in the minds of the people. Politics finally conquered and Mr. Spear stepped out.

The deceased was a native of Quincy, the date of his birth being Aug. 7, 1835. When a boy he went to sea with his father and visited many foreign ports, sailing twice around the world. He then learned the carpenters trade, but was attracted to California by the gold fever. Later he was in the furniture business with Mr. Albert Keating and then with his son-in-law, Mr. F. F. Crane. Since retiring from the postmastership he has been a dealer in paper hangings, paints, builders hardware, etc., in this city.

Mr. Spear leaves a widow, two daughters and one son.

The funeral services of Mr. Samuel H. Spear occurred Wednesday afternoon from his late residence on Granite street. It was very largely attended by relatives, neighbors city officials and friends. Rev. H. E. Cotton of Christ's church officiated. There were many floral tributes, including one from the Quincy Post office. The burial was private, the interment being in the family lot at Mount Wollaston cemetery.

Favor New Water Supply.

The following petition was circulated in the Ward Two polling place Tuesday, and the voters it will be seen, were not backward in endorsing the City Council in its efforts to get a new water supply.

Of the 239 voters only three declined to sign the petition, among the signers are:

QUINCY, Mass., Jan. 27, 1891.

Burglaries.

Monday night burglars entered the grocery store of E. E. Hall & Co. on Washington street and got a quantity of postage stamps, cash, cigars and eleven bottles of Jamaica ginger. Entrance was made by breaking a glass in the door and slipping the night latch.

The next place to receive a visit was the Co-operative store on Franklin street. Entrance was made here by smashing a large pane of glass in the window near the door. Once inside they smashed the money drawer into kindling wood, but as it was empty no money was obtained. They also went through the desk and threw the books about the store. When they left they carried away two hams, six bottles of pickled tongues, a number of packages of cigarettes and a quantity of tobacco.

An attempt was also made to enter Willard's drug store, but they did not succeed. They tried the cellar window and then the window in the back of the store. They dug the putty from the sash, but being unable to slip the catch, they left.

These breaks and the one of last Friday evening at the City drug store, which was kept quiet for good reasons, have aroused the people of South Quincy, who have been clamoring for a night police, as this section is often made the rendezvous for a gang of toughs, who go to Neponset and fill up with fire water and come here to cool off.

For the Patriot

Letter from the State House.

BOSTON, Jan. 28, 1891.

Mr. Burke, of Quincy, had taken from last year's files today the petition of Quincy for leave to take a water supply.

Once in awhile a matter turns up which to the mind of the average layman lets new light upon the condition of our laws. Such a one was offered on Thursday by Senator Bennett of Suffolk, proposing a change in present laws so that hereafter married women committing crimes shall not be presumed to act under the coercion of their husbands.

The first annual report of the state tax commissioner says that the total of taxes assessed in 1890, under the corporation tax law was $3,158,109. The total valuation of capital stock of corporation in 1890 was $460,022,552, or a gain of $53,202,205 over 1889. The total number of corporations was 2,954 on December 31, 1890. The assessments on Savings banks deposits were $1,064,763; on insurance premiums, $203,264. The life insurance excise tax amounted to $120,435. The commissioner takes up the matter of investment associations which promise enormous and extraordinary returns to their investors and says it is feared great loss may accrue to our citizens unless stringent laws are passed for their protection.

The gross interest bearing debt of cities and towns is $108,928,748 and the net debt is $66,502,030. The aggregate local assessment for taxes in 1890 was $31,503,666, and the sinking funds amounts to $34,057,570.

The day before Secretary Pierce went out of office, he signed the abstract of returns of votes on the issue of liquor licenses. It appears that at the last annual meetings of cities and towns the total yes vote was 125,494 and the total no vote was 105,958. The first-class licenses issued numbered 1,449; second-class, 84; third class, 7; fourth-class, 1,059; fifth-class, 81; sixth-class, 998; licenses revoked, 12; amount received for licenses, $1,779,957. Of that amount, $1,058,721 was from Suffolk county, which means in this case just about the City of Boston, Essex and Hampden were the only other counties which received over $100,000.

How enormous are the Savings banks deposits of the State appears from the report of the commissioners. The sum is $353,592,937. Other items bring up the liabilities column to $372,476,568. Gross interest and profits for the year ended Oct. 31, 1890 were $17,628,701 and the ordinary dividends amounted to $13,091,807. Of the banks, 151 paid four per cent.; three paid 4 1-4; eighteen paid 4 1-2; three paid 4 3-4 and three paid 5. The latter was the highest rate. The largest item of investments is $143,353,046 in loans on real estate, the next is loans on personal security, $93,862,179, and state, city, town, and county bonds aggregate $42,083,372, which is the third largest item. Loans bear from one and a half to eight per cent. interest. There are $105,935,422 loaned at five per cent. and $36,414,850 at 4 1-2. These are the largest items.

As the limit of time for the introduction of new business draws near, the volumes of petitions and orders increases and there is to be noticed a decided advance over the last three or four years in the number of so-called labor measures. A hearing has already been given on one of them, which has been before the legislative annually for several years—the proposition to prevent the fining of operatives for imperfect weaving. This year the agitators have the support of the Governor, and it is reported that they are determined to make a strenuous fight.

It was something in this way that the weekly payments law was coined. Year after year the petitioners presented their facts and arguments, and with the same regularity the manufacturers, headed by the Arkwright club were able to defeat them. But the movement gained strength and at the last, after experiment had satisfied the manufacturers that the payments could be made, they ceased their opposition and the bill went through with a great majority.

Another labor measure which is pending has been offered by Mr. Moriarty of Worcester. He has put it in under two forms, but the chief idea is that railroad employes shall not be compelled to labor over ten hours a day, save in exceptional circumstances, and then they are to receive extra pay. His bill says that their day's work shall consist of ten hours inside of eleven consecutive hours, except in cases of accident and unavoidable delay. Then their extra work must have extra pay. Violation of the law is punishable by a fine of $100.

Opposition is developing to the pending constitutional amendment for biennial State elections. It appears that the printed remonstrances which have begun to be received are sent out by an organization which is evidently working an extensive canvass for signatures.

Doctors, if not their patients, will be likely to follow with interest the disposal of the order which was adopted Wednesday in regard to compelling the registration of all medical degrees. The step is proposed as a further regulation of the practice of medicine.

Various propositions are pending for amendment of the game law. One is that the close season for quail shall be from Jan. 15 to October 15. There is a constant seesaw between the sportsmen and farmers on game questions. The former want the game preserved for them to shoot on the farmers' property; the latter generally want more freedom.

The members have come to see that a rule habitually disregarded is worse than no rule at all and so they have changed the time for final reports of all joint committees from the second to the fourth Wednesday in March. Even the latter limit is usually exceeded, but they will make an extra effort to live up to it now that the rule has been nominally rescued from its "innocuous desuetude."

January has been as nearly wasted as any January of recent years. The time of the leading members of the House, which should have been devoted to the harmonious expediting of business before the committees and to the systematic organization of work, has been largely filled with efforts to make operative a rule to expedite business which is greatly unpopular and which can never be made to accomplish its purpose. But there are some things which must be learned by experience but this costly departure from the practice of previous legislatures seems to have been one of them. The Senate has not adopted the new rule and never will this year, and the superiority of its methods is daily evident.

Gov. Russell has sent to the legislature a communication from the managers of the world's fair in Chicago in 1892, asking the State to be suitably represented there.

Greedy Boston.

Boston is jealous of Philadelphia, Chicago and other large cities, and that the city may compare favorably with these, the Herald proposes a grand scheme to gobble up all the surrounding municipalities, not only those now adjacent to it, but Lynn, Swampscott, Saugus, Woburn and others. Just for the privilege of saying to Chicago, "I am as big as you," it would have Quincy, Milton, Hyde Park, Brookline, Newton and twenty other cities and towns, give up their individually and become small factors in an unwieldy city.

Quincy people we venture to say, do not care to become denizens of Boston sufficient to make the sacrifice. The people lose enough control when they give up a town form of government for a city, but in a city even half the size of Boston they are almost powerless. New York has given us repeated examples of corruptions in municipal affairs.

We can conceive of but one or two arguments of any weight that would be a benefit to Quincy. It would be desirable to have the sewerage of this city enter the Boston system, and it would probably cost less than an independent system. The same is possibly true of a water supply. Yet these might be secured jointly with other towns now if thought feasible.

We think it might be advisable to annex some cities to Boston, say within the five mile radius, Brookline Cambridge, Somerville, Medford, Everett, Malden, Chelsea, Revere and Winthrop.

Quincy is satisfied to be left alone. It is now in a prosperous era. It stands high in the percentage of gain in population as will be seen by the following summary:

	Population in 1890.	Per cent. of Increase since 1880.
Everett,	11,068	166.1

Quincy also conducts her affairs economically and has a lower tax rate than the average suburban places, lower than any of the cities in fact aside from Boston.

Post Office To Move.

Through the efforts of Congressman Morse in securing a large additional allowance for rent for the Quincy Post Office (after July 1st, next), the post office will be moved into Adams Block as soon as it can be fitted, probably about the first of March. As the appropriation for rent, fuel, lights etc., was exhausted for the year ending June 1st, 1891, Mr. Adams very generously accepted the small rent the government was now paying from March 1st until July 1st.

Congressman Morse has secured a public building for Taunton at this session, and a favorable report from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for Brockton, and it will be Quincy's turn next. The Government leases Mr. Adams' store for a post office for five years. Perhaps by that time Quincy will see a post office building owned by the government.

Those Diamonds.

For some weeks past grave rumors have been afloat about Mr. N. B. Furnald, which if true would place that official in a very serious position. The PATRIOT man was one of the first to hear the rumor, but thought nothing about it, as rumors of a similar nature have always been circulated about some of our officers, as the time for reappointment draws near. While in the past years they have been mere minor matters, this is different and the rumor instead of dying out appears to be on the increase, and in justice to Mr. Furnald who has always been a terror to evil doers, an investigation is due that the citizens may know the truth of the matter, and after a thorough investigation we have no hesitancy in pronouncing the story untrue.

SATURDAY, JAN. 31, 1891.

But He Never Did.

There are no words than these more sad:
"I could have done it—if I had had—"
The man who chants this sad refrain
Has always failed to catch the train.
"He could have bought the corner lot
For fifty dollars—like as not—
Which, some two weeks ago or more,
You paid eleven thousand for.
The carriage team you bought in town—
Planking eleven hundred down—
"He could have got," along last fall,
For just four hundred, r'g and all.
"If he had had—" when Jones went in—
The Congressman he'd now have been.
"If he had had—" your schooling, say
A Supreme Judge he'd be today.
"If he had had—" your start and health,
Millions would scarcely count his wealth,
"If he had" read theology.
A second Beecher he would be;
"If he had" turned his thoughts to rhyme,
The ages with his muse would chime;
"If he had had—" what crowns to win!
"If he had had—" he could have been—
"If he had had—" how high his throne!
"If he had had—" he now would own—
Stale, flat, unprofitable, sad—
"If I had had—if I had had."

—Burdette.

Household Receipts.

SNOW ICE-CREAM. Beat well together one cup clear sweet cream, one cup sugar and one fresh egg; set in snow until cold, then stir in light snow until thick. Put in the flavoring before the snow is added.

GINGER APPLES. Boil in 1½ pints of water one-half ounce nicely cleaned ginger root, then add two pounds of sugar and let boil five minutes more. Add two pounds of apples, pared, cored and quartered. Cook until clear, skim out, boil down the syrup and pour it over.

CREAMED PARSNIPS. Boil and peel parsnips; cut them in slices, and after spreading each slice with butter, lay in a vegetable dish and pour over them a white sauce made of a cup of boiling milk cooked until thick with two spoonfuls of flour and one of butter; pepper and salt to taste.

SWEET POTATO CROQUETTES. Boil six large potatoes until they are just tender, then remove the skins and mash the potatoes through a colander or a vegetable press, add a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of pepper and a tablespoonful of sugar. Mix thoroughly, form into croquettes, dip first in egg and then in bread crumbs, and fry in smoking-hot fat.

CELERY ON TOAST. If not used in soup celery may be creamed and served on toast. The following recipe is well worth trying: Cut the stalks of celery into inch pieces, cover them with milk and let them boil until tender. Season to taste with salt and pepper, and liberally with butter, pour over squares of hot toast and serve at once. The milk may be omitted and the vegetable stewed in water till tender, seasoned to taste with salt, pepper and butter. In this recipe it is not to be served on toast. A pinch of soda should be added while it is cooking.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES. Nice buckwheat cakes are made of four cups of buckwheat flour, one scant cup of yellow Indian meal, a tablespoonful of salt mixed up with three cups of hot water and one cup of cold milk, making the mixture about blood warm. Beat this batter vigorously, and add a cup of liquid yeast or a yeast cake dissolved in a cup of lukewarm water. Buckwheat cakes, after the first rising, should be raised with some of the batter. For this purpose there should always be made at least a pint more than is used each time, and this should be set away in a cool place to serve as yeast for the next batch of cakes. These cakes raised with buckwheat batter will be better than the first raised with yeast.

☞ Dr. Clarence Thwing of Brooklyn, N. Y., who took charge of a mission hospital at Sitka, Alaska, last October, is encouraged in his enlarging work, and his wife finds a growing field of labor as a teacher among the Alaskan youth of both sexes in the Prebyterian Training School.

A BOY'S PRAYER. Smart children's sayings are rather overdone, but there was a good deal of diplomacy about a little fellow who prayed long and earnestly for a double ripper. Finally his mother told him that perhaps God didn't think best for him to have a double ripper, and his next prayer was formed a little differently, "O Lord, please send me two sleds and a board."—Springfield Homestead.

A THANKFUL MAN. The following incident occurred in a pious family not a hundred miles from Stoughton. On Thanksgiving morning the head of the family, while thanking the Lord for the good He had done for the little ones of his family, grew eloquent over the benefits they had received. He thanked Him for the old horse Barney, which gave them such delightful country riding. He thanked Him for their home and good dinners, and he poured out his soul in thanks to God for the toys that they had. His little four-year-old daughter could not contain herself. She broke into the prayer with a sigh, and then clapping ecstatically said: "Oh, God, don't you wish you were us?"

Anecdotes.

Cobwigger.—"That woman is never at home. She seems to have merely married a rich man so that she could have time and means to follow her mission."

Brown.—"That's just it. She goes around the country lecturing how to make home attractive."—Epoch.

Pedler—Please, mum, I'm sellin' a polish to clean silver.

Housekeeper (sharply)—Don't want none.

Pedler—Very sorry, mum, but I see the neighbors was right. They said there was no use callin' here 'cause you didn't have no silver.

Housekeeper (wildly)—Gimme six boxes. —New York Weekly.

Tramp—What is it?

Benevolent Woman—Chicken.

Tramp—I know, but what breed?

Benevolent Woman—Leghorn.

Tramp—Take it away. I only eat Plymouth Rock. I'm a Bostonian, I am.—Munsey's Weekly.

He (deeply in love, but proud as Lucifer) —Do you love me?

She—No.

He—Well, I fancied you did, you know, and I wanted to tell you I'm already engaged.

Little Eddie (to his papa)—Papa, here comes a policeman.

Papa (a bank cashier)—What! Here?

Little Eddie—No, he's walking past the house.

Papa (resuming his paper)—You little imp! The next time you see an officer pass the house, keep it to yourself.

Mr. Bingo—I have terrible news. While I was in Cousin Flint's hardware store today getting a mouse-trap, he said that the old homestead had been burned, your Aunt Maria had perished in the flames, and the children were coming down to the city to live with us.

Mrs. Bingo—You don't mean to tell me that you have seen a mouse in this house?

Wealth crowds poverty off the grand stand at the horse race, but Brussels soap, through merit alone, is crowding all other soaps out of wash tub society.

His Letter.

Last week Miss Willard told the delightful story of the Chicago newsboy who became her secretary. In that she spoke of a letter received from Mr. Raymond. Here it is:

PARIS, Nov. 1, 1890.

MY DEAR FRIEND: Behold me a student again! Perhaps thoughtful people are students under any and all circumstances; but one looks more studious, you know, when he is surrounded with books and papers and is poring over some abstruse book in a foreign tongue. Such has been my environment for the past two weeks, and you can judge of my abstraction of mind by the fact that only now have I been able to drag myself away from my studying long enough to write you these lines. I shall always thank the Giver of all good for placing my lot where I could meet and know and love you; and for the future,—here is something:

Build a little fence of trust all around today;
Fill the space with loving work and within it stay.
Look not through the sheltering bars, anxious for the morrow,
God will help in all that comes, be it joy or sorrow.

But whether the connection between your words and my pencil be broken or not the connection between our minds will continue.

Your letters of introduction have done me good service. When I reached New York I called on Mrs. Cleveland armed with your missive and was cordially received. She is a thoroughly American woman and I am glad to have a picture in my mind of her. She wished to be very kindly remembered to you. Gladstone replied to my note enclosing your letter from Hawarden, that he was sorry to say he was so busy that it was impossible to make any appointment there. He was very frank about it, which I admired greatly, though I was very sorry not to meet him.

Dr. Parker was very cordial to me,—said that he wanted to leave on my memory a kindly picture of himself. I was especially taken with him and his preaching—indeed I think he is the most powerful preacher I ever heard. His church is modern and American-like; and I felt more at home in it than I have felt since I have been in Europe. Mr. Spurgeon too, took great pains to show his appreciation of your letter. He made an appointment with me by mail for a certain hour, and when I came and showed his letter to an assistant, the latter said he was in a meeting, but he would call him. I begged him not to do so, but he said Mr. Spurgeon had made an engagement and would want to keep it; and sure enough, up came the great preacher all out of breath to see me, whom nobody ever heard of. He put me at my ease immediately, and we had a very pleasant visit.

Archdeacon Farrar (he has been promoted, you will remember, and is no longer "Canon," as you called him in your letter) invited me to tea, and I spent a most delightful hour with him. He is the great man of the church of England today. His huge, cold, ancient church is packed to overflowing every time he preaches, as are also the places of Parker and Spurgeon. These three men are distinct types of men and of preachers. All incomparable in their field of work, they are also incomparable with each other. One would not think of asking, for instance whether Spurgeon was superior to Farrar. The former is an Evangelist, pure and simple, a Moody in appearance, manner and work. His church is like a barn, with no ornaments, or cushions or other amenities. Farrar is a type of an Englishman, an English gentlemen,—courtly, elegant, refined, clever. His church, St. Margaret's, though he himself calls it "poor," in comparison, probably, with a possible church composed entirely of Rothschilds, is in reality one of the most fashionable in fashionable Westminster.

It is a favorite with Americans, who have put up a magnificent window in it to the memory of Sir Walter Raleigh, who is buried in the church. Parker is a mean between the two, and yet entirely original in himself. His church is cosy and homelike, just such a place as one would rejoice to look back upon as the place where his first religious impressions were fostered, though it is one of busy London's busiest thoroughfares.

Mr. Stead took great pains to be agreeable. He was writing an editorial when I came, and had shut himself up from the world; but came out in a hurry when his secretary announced "the young man who had the letter from Miss Willard." I had a long talk with him about journalism and literature. He showed me your picture framed and hanging in his sanctum sanctorum. He gave me the last "Review," some copies of his "Oberammergan Passion Play," a ticket to Mrs. Booth's funeral—a grand affair, by the way, which showed the strength of the Salvation Army,—and gave me a letter to the librarian of the British Museum, which secured me free access to the wonderful collection of three million books in that treasure house of the world.

Lady Henry Somerset fully came up to my expectations. I enjoyed my visit there greatly.

Mrs. Hannah Whitall Smith invited me to dinner Sunday, but unfortunately there are two streets in London of the same name, and I got on the wrong one and so missed her.

But I must stop now, and reserve something for my next letter.

Very truly,
JEROME RAYMOND.

Counterfeit Currency.

"More counterfeit money is in actual circulation than people in general believe," remarked a teller in one of Chicago's leading bank recently. "Of course, only the better class of counterfeits remain in circulation, and even then do not pass undetected long. The detection of a counterfeit bill, however, does not retire it from circulation by any means. A grocer, for instance, who finds a $5 counterfeit bill in his money-drawer at night is liable to argue that he cannot well afford to lose the amount, and, also, that a counterfeit which was good enough to deceive him is good enough to deceive some one else. The next day some customer gets it in change, and ten to one it is passed through a dozen hands before the discovery is again made that it is bogus. But its mission does not end here. Perhaps the last holder of the bill can tell who paid it to him. If so the counterfeit starts to retrace its course, but it rarely goes very far before it stops, and the whole scheme is worked over again. We frequently have counterfeit money offered for deposit. A merchant may bring in several hundred dollars, and among the bills is a single counterfeit. Of course it is thrown out as soon as it is discovered. But where does it go? Into the hands of the man that brought it in. Does he destroy it? Perhaps, if he is a scrupulously honest man."—Chicago Mail.

A Grand Army Week Proposed.

A dispatch from Monticello, Ill., says: The Grand Army of the Republic of the United States will ask that there be a week set apart during the World's Fair, Chicago, to be known as "Grand Army Week," during which it is designed to have a grand reunion of the old Armies of the Potomac, the James, the Tennessee and Cumberland, with all the other departments, to join in a grand parade and review. It will also be proposed that the President and the Commander of the Grand Army of the Republic review the great parade of 250,000 of the old veterans of the war, who are to be formed in divisions and army corps as they served in the army, commanded by the senior officer of each army living.

Temperance.

Prohibition a Success.

That shrewd philosopher, Josh Billings, once remarked that it was "a good deal better not to know so much than to know so many things that ain't so."

This remark comes to my mind as I look back over the past ten years. In 1881, when the town instructed the Selectmen to appoint the undersigned to enforce the laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors, many officials and their convivial friends declared that prohibition was a failure and could not be maintained. They also argued that even an attempt to enforce the law would drive business men out of town and send shoppers elsewhere to buy their goods. Let us see what the facts are.

Nobody will deny that there can be no fairer or more accurate index of the prosperity of a town than the condition of its savings bank. The subjoined table tells its own significant story of the progress of this community in a material way:

MONEY ON DEPOSIT IN QUINCY SAVINGS BANK.

April 1, 1881,	$1,034,392
" " 1882,	1,053,225
" " 1883,	1,046,856
" " 1884,	1,108,631
" " 1885,	1,124,676
" " 1886,	1,187,289
" " 1887,	1,251,097
" " 1888,	1,337,779
" " 1889,	1,413,481
" " 1890,	1,528,565
Oct. 1, 1890,	1,606,564

Added to the above is the fact that there have been two co-operative banks organized. The oldest of these is that at Wollaston, which was started on April 16, 1889. Its treasurer writes me that on Jan. 1, 1891, the institution had 257 members or depositors, and that the amount put in, aside from the profits, was $25,915.

The Quincy Co-operative Bank began business on May 7, 1889. At the beginning of this year (1891) it had 269 members, and its deposits aggregated $19,230.

But this is not all. During the last ten years the population has increased from 10,570 to 16,711, a gain of fifty-eight per cent. The number of houses erected in 1881 was twenty-four; in 1889, 163, and in ten years 1,013. The valuation in 1880 was $7,528,096; in 1890, $13,677,410, a gain eighty-two per cent. In the year ending April 30, 1882, there were forty-two licenses granted under a town government; today, under city control, no license is granted, even to druggists. The District Court record shows that in one year, in Randolph, under license, with a population of 3,807, there were 143 drunks reported by the police, while in Quincy, then more than three times as large, the number of similar offenders for the same period of time was fifty-five.

Surely no further evidence will be asked for by anybody with which to confound the "false prophets" who once resided in Quincy. The old cry "Prohibition cannot be enforced," has ceased. Kitchen grogshops are nuisances of the past, and pocket peddlers of the "ardent" have been compelled to seek more congenial climes.

No one will deny that during the past ten years Quincy has been rapidly and steadily growing in wealth, in population and in everything which makes a town or a city a more desirable place of residence.

And a large part of this very desirable state of things, let it be understood, is due to prohibition—enforced.

HENRY H. FAXON.

Boston Theatres.

Tremont.

The second edition of "The City Directory" will be issued from the Tremont on and after next Monday evening to regular subscribers, by the firm of Russell's Comedians, the well-known publishers. All the best of the matter of the original work, by the original artists, has been retained, while the additions are encyclopædic in their character and universal in their scope, with a main tendency, however, to fun. The subjects of music, dancing, extravaganza and fun have been elaborated not to say exhaustingly, treated, while in the appendix will be found a few pages devoted to fun. Russell's Comedians can only remain with the Tremont patrons for two weeks and it behooves all to secure seats in advance. Places can be now secured at the box-office for the first week of the presentations of this matchless farce-comedy, "THE CITY DIRECTORY."

Hollis Street.

Large and fashionable audiences have greeted Miss Fanny Davenport at the Hollis the past week in her grand impersonation of "Cleopatra" and it is with regret that we announce next week to be the last one of the engagement. The performance commences at quarter of eight sharp every evening and there are Saturday matinees only. The stage pictures are many and beautiful, especially the terrace at Memphis with its night landscape so beautiful and impressive, Cleopatra's barge and also the temple of Isis. The music of the opera is under the direction of Mr. W. W. Furst and is of a high order. Take it all in all the opera of "Cleopatra" is more elaborate and beautiful than anything which has been presented in Boston this season and the regular Hollis Street prices prevail for all that.

Boston Museum.

"The Solicitor" and "Betty's Finish" will run several weeks longer at the Museum. The plays continue very popular, drawing crowded houses every night, while the ladies just swarm at the matinees. People enjoy a good laugh and many have been frequent visitors at the Museum of late, once not satisfying.

Boston.

The sign "Standing Room Only" has been displayed frequently the past week at the Boston where the Hanlon-Volter and Martinetti Company have been making things lively. "A Terrible Night" a comedy pantomine is received with laughter throughout the play.

The Bell of the Angels.

There has come to my mind a legend,
  A thing I had half forgot,
And whether I read it or dreamed it,
  Ah, well, it matters not.

It is said that in heaven at twilight,
  A great bell softly swings,
And man may listen and hearken
  To the wondrous music that rings.

If he thrusts from his soul all hatred,
  All thoughts of wicked things,
He can hear in the holy twilight,
  How the bell of the angels ring.

And I think there lies in the legend,
  If we open our eyes to see,
Somewhat of an inner meaning,
  My friend, to you and me.

Let us look in our hearts and question;
  Can pure thoughts enter in
To a soul, if it be already
  The dwelling of thoughts of sin?

So, then, let us ponder a little—
  Let us look in our hearts and see
If the twilight bell of the angels
  Could ring for us—you and me.

Miscellany.

"POLLY AND I."

Uncle Granville was worried. Pauline was his pet, and she did not seem happy. She had lost flesh and color and was moody.

Pauline Bruce was an orphan. Her father, after making and losing a fortune, died, leave his penniless twelve-year-old daughter to the care of his brother Granville and his sister Lavinia.

At eighteen, Pauline committed what Aunt Lavinia considered an unpardonable indiscretion—she fell in love. She and handsome Jack Carter had corresponded during his course at West Point, and when he returned home to Fulton for a few weeks what was more unusual than that affairs should come to a crisis?

And so they parted—Jack to join his regiment and Pauline to settle down to "the daily round, the common task." Jack's letters came regularly and Aunt Lavinia insisted on reading them, and was not sparing in her criticisms.

But now matters changed. George Drayton, a bachelor, forty years old and wealthy, had become Pauline's ardent admirer, encouraged by Miss Lavinia, who privately persuaded Granville Bruce into the belief that his niece was becoming sincerely attached to her suitor. At last, one summer evening, a year after Jack Carter had said good-bye and gone West, Aunt Lavinia decided that the time for action had come, and, armed with her knitting and a severe expression of countenance, entered Pauline's room.

"Pauline!" she began. "It is time you were thinking about the future!" At present you are entirely dependent on your uncle and myself, but we are both growing old, and your support of late has proved a heavy burden. For myself—I can stand it. But Granville, while seemingly robust is not as strong as he once was, and he feels the expense sadly. He is fond of you and does not complain, but he has talked to me of the relief it will be to know that you are comfortably settled and cared for by our kind and generous friend." There is nothing to prevent your marriage taking place in six months.

The girl shuddered. 'So soon!" she gasped.

"Why should you wait? It is not as if you were bound to an empty-headed boy"—pointedly and severely—"who had his way to make. Good-night!"

Pauline did not hear her. In her ears rang the words, whispered on a moonlight night a year ago:

"I am only a poor man Polly, who has his way to make."

How they had talked of what would happen when he was first lieutenant!

The next day Pauline sent a pitiful little note to Lieut. John Carter, U. S. A. It only asked him not to misjudge her, but to try and believe that it was necessary for her to give him up, and she signed it—"For the last time—your Polly."

When this epistle was handed to Jack Carter he had just sealed a letter addressed to Miss Pauline Bruce, triumphantly informed her that he was now a first lieutenant, and that he would be in Fulton the first of January, as he would have a month's leave of absence at that date. This important missive was thrown into the fire by the writer with the fervent ejaculation:

"It is the work of that infernal old cat."

And then, though he was a brave army man, he threw himself face downward on his narrow couch and sobbed like a heart-broken boy. But that afternoon at dress parade his comrades noticed a look of determination about the firm mouth and a fiery spark in the brown eyes. His only answer to Pauline's letter was:

"I can't understand. I shall see you on New Year's day."

The months passed, and in November Miss Lavinia named the day of her niece's marriage. It was the first of February.

It was toward Christmas that Uncle Granville became anxious. Pauline had changed to such a thin, fragile girl. He watched her closely and became convinced that all was not right with her. He questioned her as to her health, but always met with the same response.

Then he attacked Miss Lavinia on the subject.

"Sister," said Mr. Bruce, "what is the matter with Pauline?"

"The matter? What do you mean? Has she been complaining to you?"

"She has not. She is like a ghost of her self. She has lost flesh, color and spirits, and there must be some cause for it. If you had not assured me that you had had a satisfactory talk with her on the subject of her engagement, I would say that she dreaded the thought of her approaching marriage."

"Granville, you are talking nonsense. You are a fool about the girl. Why should she marry George Drayton if she does not wish to do so?"

The holiday week slipped slowly by, too rapidly for some people, but wearily and sadly for others. Pauline belonged to both classes. To her one day was like another in dreariness, and yet each hour was precious in her sight as being among the last that she could call her own. As New Year's day drew near she became nervous and restless. Her uncle's eyes followed her anxiously, and he lay awake far into the night pondering on the change that had come over the merry girl.

At last he discovered the cause of all this unexplained wretchedness. Pauline had always invited a number of young people to spend the first evening of the year with her, and this year was to be no exception to the usual rule. She awoke on the morning of January 1 with a sickening thought. Only one month more of freedom—and this freedom almost bondage! She returned her uncle's morning kiss with white quivering lips.

Nearly the entire day was spent in preparing the house for the evening festivities. The faded Christmas holly and mistletoe were removed and replaced by fresh. About the middle of the afternoon Uncle Granville entered the parlor and found Pauline draping the fireplace with long green streamers.

"Little girl!" he exclaimed, "I came in to tell you a piece of news! Guess whom I met just now!"

Pauline grasped the mantel for support.

"I don't know!" she faltered.

"Well, my dear, Jack Carter is at home! I was so glad to see the dear boy that I asked him to come in tonight. At first he hesitated and looked queer, I thought. But finally he consented."

"Oh, Uncle! He must not come! I can't bear it! I can't bear it!" and Pauline, white and trembling, swayed as though she would faint.

"My little girl!" he murmured. "My poor little girl! Tell me all about it, darling!"

"Jack and I were engaged, Uncle—till—till—I---accepted Mr. Drayton!"

"And you broke the engagement?"

"Yes, Uncle!"

"Surely you did not sell yourself---it can't be that you accepted him---Drayton, I mean---because he had more money!"

"Oh, no! no! I hate his money and presents and everything he owns---and if he were not rich it would have been all right! I need not have taken him. But, you see, his money was the thing needed. And that is why we are engaged! It is his money I am dependent upon---or will be soon!

"Pauline, do you love Drayton?"

"No!" desperately emphatic.

"Do you love Jack Carter?"

The blonde head sank lower on his shoulder.

"Then, child, why do you accept another man?"

"Because I had to! I am such a burden and expense to you! And it would have been necessary for Jack and I to wait for several years. Aunt Lavinia said it was my duty to you to engage myself to a rich man---one who could marry me soon and relieve you of the cruel burden of my support. She said that you wanted me to do so. And I know I ought not to be such a weight on you---you who have denied yourself all these years for me!"

"My child, you shall not marry any man whom you do not love!"

"But I must!"

"But you shall not!"

"What can I do?"

"Nothing dear! Trust your old uncle---that is all. And look me in the eyes and promise me never to doubt that I am amply able to support you for the rest of your life. It has never been anything but a pleasure."

He led her up to her room, and, kissing her, bade her lie down and sleep till time to dress for the evening. Then she heard him call Miss Lavinia.

"Sister! Pauline has a headache and is lying down. See that she is not disturbed. Send her a cup of tea at supper time.

And without waiting to explain his peremptory order he left the house. In her darkened room Pauline slept heavily, and Miss Lavinia was left to her own musings.

At supper, Uncle Granville met his sister's stony gaze with composure.

"How is Pauline?" he asked.

"I know nothing of her except the information which you so brusquely imparted this afternoon."

"Have you sent her a cup of tea?"

"I have done so. After your decided orders, brother, I did not dare take it up myself!"

Miss Lavinia changed her tactics, and inquired timidly,

"Have you seen Mr. Drayton today?"

"I have."

"He will be here tonight, I presume?"

"Yes."

A longer silence was broken this time by Pauline's entrance in evening dress. She wore a gown of pale green tulle, through which her arms and shoulders gleamed whitely. Her color was vivid, and her eyes glistened with feverish brilliancy.

"My dear, you are beautiful tonight!" exclaimed her uncle.

About the middle of the evening Pauline became conscious that Jack Carter had entered the room with a group of other guests. She heard the murmur of surprise and pleasure that greeted his re-appearance in Fulton society after such a long absence for he had always been a favorite. But she did not turn in his direction till a well known voice said;

"A happy New Year, Miss Bruce!"

"Thank you," she murmured, giving him her hand without raising her eyes.

But Miss Lavinia seized upon him immediately.

"Mr. Carter, it is most fortunate you should be here just now. You know our dear Pauline is to be married the first of February and you must stay east for the wedding."

"Thank you madam!"

At this moment Kate Floyd, a Fulton beauty, who had always had an admiring liking for the handsome officer, clutched his arm and gushingly announced in her high-pitched tones;

"And now, Mr. Carter, I want you, please, to give us that exquisite little song you used to sing before you went so far away. I always liked it so much. And the very last time that we all came to spend the evening with Pauline before you left us you sang it—oh, so sweetly. Don't you remember it! About 'Polly' 'twenty years ago!'"

"Ah, yes, do please, sing it!" pleaded many voices.

For an instant all the color left the young man's face. Then his courage rose to the occasion, and he gave Miss Lavina a look that nearly destroyed her equanimity.

"Certainly," he said quietly.

As Jack Carter took his seat at the piano and struck the first chord of the song for which all were now waiting, Pauline, with a muttered apology, softly left the room. Once out of the parlor she ran like a hunted hare. At the end of the hall was a small room, Uncle Granville's sanctum, and to this she fled. The apartment was unlighted save by the coals in the grate. Throwing herself face downward on a sofa in a dusky corner she lay motionless and listened. The rich tenor voice was singing the plaintive air and words:

"Polly and I were sweethearts,
  As all the neighbors know—
Polly and I were sweethearts
  Twenty years ago!
Polly was made of dimples,
  So winsome and wee and fair—
And if ever you missed a sunbeam
  You'd find it in Polly's hair."

The girl held her hands up toward the firelight and laughed bitterly.

"Dimpled! Yes, I once was—he used to sing that to me.."

A hand was laid on her shoulder.

"Pauline," said George Drayton, your uncle told me everything this afternoon. I followed you here to tell you good-bye. I leave town tomorrow to be gone several months. You are a noble, brave woman, and I thank you for your intended sacrifice!"

"I am so sorry," she faltered.

But he checked her.

"Say no more, please," he begged; "God bless you, Pauline!"

She was again alone. How the wind wailed outside and how the music sobbed through the old house! There was a heart-break in every note. The words were borne to her distinctly.

"To talk of the house I'd furnish,
  And the ring I'd have to give,
And the love we would bear for each other
  So long as we both should live."

The applause following the song seemed profanation.

George Drayton beckoned Jack Carter into the hall.

"My boy," he said, "my engagement to Miss Bruce is over!" He paused and his face flushed. "She never loved me. She was forced into accepting me. That is past now!" He caught his breath and clenched his hands convulsively. "Go to her. She can explain. She is there!" pointing to the room in which Pauline had taken refuge.

Before Jack could speak Drayton had wrung his hand and was out of the house.

Pauline still knelt in the dark.

Somebody entered the room and stood beside her. Strong arms lifted her and Jack's voice said:

"My little Polly! Now and always! Do you remember, sweetheart, that we promised to love each other so long as we both should live?"

And a few minutes Pauline lifted her head from Jack's shoulder with a start.

"What is it, Polly, darling?"

"Oh, Jack! What will Aunt Lavinia say?"

His answer need not be recorded.

The next day Jack wrote a letter, in which he asked to have his leave of absence extended to two months. He was to be married on February first.—Virginia Franklyn in the Home-Maker.

Mail Cars.

Nearly every railroad in the United States carries, at least once a day, one or more men whose business it is to receive, sort, and deliver the mail gathered at the towns along or near that road.

If there is little work to be done, one man does it alone, in a small room built in a part of the baggage-car or smoking-car. As the business increases, two or more men work together, having a whole car for their accommodation. This car is drawn directly behind the engine, so that there shall be no occasion for any passing through it. With still more business, between the large cities, two or more cars are run; until between New York and Chicago we have a whole train run exclusively for the mail service, made up of five cars and worked by twenty men. A line of railroad between two cities, used in this way, for sorting the mail, is called an "R. P. O.," i. e., "Railway Post-office," and there is an immense number of such in the country, taking their names from the chief offices on the line.

Such are the "Boston and Albany," "Boston, Springfield and New York," "Portland and Island Point," "Chicago and Cedar Rapids," and many hundred others. The runs vary greatly in length, ranging from twenty miles to as high as a thousand miles. The extremely long runs, with the exception of the "New York and Chicago," are found only in the West, where there are great distances between the cities. On such a run there will be two or more men, one crew sleeping while the other works. The "New York and Chicago" is divided into three sections. On this run the twenty men who start out from New York are relieved by as many more at Syracuse, and these in turn are relieved at Cleveland by another company who take the train into Chicago. As a general thing, however, a run is planned to be about the distance which can be covered in a day.

On all the more important lines there are two sets of men, one for day and one for night service. If the run is a short one with but little mail, one man does the work alone, running every day, and usually having several hours to rest at one end of the road or the other. Where the run is long enough, so that the trip takes all day, there will be four sets of men. One man, or set of men, starts at one end of the run, and covers the entire line, meeting the other somewhere on the route, and returning the next day. When these men have worked a week, they go home and rest a week, and the others take their places. Such is the arduous nature of the work, the strain to mind and body, and particularly to eyesight, from working all day long in the constant jar and rattle, that few men would be able to retain a place were it not for these periods of rest.—Max Bennett in February St. Nicholas.

For Twine, $72,000.

It seems to be the impression of many people that the mail when sent from an office is gathered carelessly together and thrown into a mail bag, which is then locked and dispatched. This is wholly wrong, for even in the smallest offices the letters and cards are all gathered face upward and tied into a neat package. The government furnishes the twine to do this, and some idea of the immensity of the postal service can be formed from the fact that in one year the cost to the government for the twine for this purpose (which, though strong, is of the cheapest quality) was nearly seventy-two thousand dollars.—St. Nicholas.

It's economical—Brussels soap.

Where to Put Stamp on Letters.

It has become a custom which all thoughtful persons always observe, to place the stamp on the upper right-hand corner of the envelope, but few people have ever stopped to think what was the reason for this choice of position. The canceling stamp and the postmarking stamp are fastened side by side upon the same handle, and if the stamp is correctly placed one blow makes both impressions. If, however, the stamp is on the lower right-hand corner the postmark falls on the address, and both are illegible, while if the stamp is on the left-hand side, the postmark, which is always at the left of the canceller, does not strike the envelope at all, and a second blow is necessary to secure it. So, if the stamp is anywhere except in the upper right-hand corner, it makes just twice as much work for the clerk, and this, where he is stamping many thousand pieces every day, is no small matter. There has been in use for some time, in the post-office in Boston, a number of cancelling machines, into which the letters, all faced upward, are fed. These machines, if the stamps are correctly placed, do the work quite well, leaving on the envelope the row of long black lines which we all have noticed on Boston letters.

I am not able to learn, however, that there is any other office in the country, as yet, which uses these. The Boston office has also, quite recently, put in operation a most ingenious machine for cancelling and postmarking postal cards, which differs from the other in the greater rapidity of its work. Two hundred cards can be placed in it at once, a crank is turned, and click, click! they fall into a basket all stamped.—St. Nicholas.

Japanese Ingenuity.

In no country in the world are the people so ingenious as are the Japanese. The numberless little contrivances which they invent either for use, comfort, amusement, or for decorative purposes, is simply wonderful. One of the many quaint little articles which go to form a part of every Japanese woman's dainty accessories is the chest-warmer. Now, a chest-warmer is nothing more or less than a diminutive charcoal stove about four inches long by two and a half wide and an inch in thickness. They are made of tin, with tiny perforations here and there on the side to furnish a draft and keep alive the fire within.

The tin is then covered with paper to prevent the escape of any particles of dust or ashes which might soil the outside cover, which is generally made of delicately embroidered silk of some bright hue. On the top is a little slide which is drawn aside to admit the fuel, which consists of a roll of charcoal the length of the box and an inch in diameter. The charcoal is finely powdered and securely packed in a tough paper cover; this roll is lighted at one end and then deposited in the little stove, where it merrily burns away for six hours before needing renewal, giving out a gentle warmth, which is decidedly agreeable on a cold day.

The Japanese women invariably dress in light weight silk kimonas (dresses), carelessly folded across the bosom. Now, as the climate of Japan is damp and at times decidedly chilly, and Japanese fashion will not admit of warm wraps, a Japanese lady deftly slips a couple of the little charcoal comforters beneath the multitudinous wrinkles and folds of her loose gown, adjusting one over each lung; then she boldly defies the cold, displaying two or three inches of shining amber-hued throat without the least fear of the terrors of pneumonia. American ladies who visit Japan find them very pleasant as hand-warmers. One of them slipped into the muff will warm one to an amazing degree.—Philadelphia Telegraph.

Wild-Cat Insurances.

The Boston papers have been calling attention to the many wild-cat insurances which have been started in this and other states during the past few years. Many people are anxious to get something for nothing, but it can only be done at the expense of some one else, and thus contains, at least, an element of swindling. A Westboro paper says that in that town there are men who belong to so many of the new-fangled insurance organizations that it is difficult for them to support their families or pay their honest bills, which, if true, is a state of affairs that ought not to exist. Good judgment is as necessary in these matters as in anything else.—Franklin Sentinel.

A Curious Fact.

Many years ago a gentleman built a country house, which he fitted up and furnished according to his taste. To accomplish this, he caused to be brought from Italy a piece of pure white marble, out of which a mantlepiece was constructed for his own particular sitting-room. The mantlepiece was of singularly pure marble in one block, and free from flaw, save in one part. Shortly after its erection the owner of the house noticed a small damp-looking stain, no bigger than the nail of his little finger, in the very center of the mantlepiece; this, however, was so slight a blemish that it did not trouble him, till, as months and years went by, it became evident that the mark slowly but surely increased in size. For twenty years the good man of the house sat in his arm-chair facing the curious stain, and marvelling what caused its certain spread. At the lapse of that period it had increased to the size of the palm of his hand, and he could no longer rest in patient contemplation of it. Masons were sent for, and desired to take down the marble and break it in two, so as to disclose the mystery. This was done, and to the amazement of all, out hopped an enormous toad!

A Comforting Reflection.

Pat wanted a position under the government, and on being told that he must be prepared to pass a civil-service examination, applied himself faithfully to the necessary preparation. Some time later his ambition for public preferment seemed to have deserted him.

"What is the matter, Pat?" asked his former employer. "Couldn't you pass the examination?"

"I could that," he replied. "I answered every question on the paper. "But," he added, his native wit coming to the rescue, "I guess they thought I knew too much to be wastin' my time washin' windies."—Harper's Magazine.

For the Patriot.

Quincy Water Supply.

Allow us to say that we fear the members of the City Council made a fatal mistake in the hearing before the State Board of Health last Tuesday.

The Board are appointed to hear and advise on the sanitary needs of the city not on the construction of such works.

Had the speakers confined themselves to the quality of the water furnished by the present works, leaving the mechanical engineering to be considered before the legislative committee, we think a recommendation favorable to the wishes of our citizens might have been made to the legislature. Good lawyers attack the vulnerable points only when arguing to a jury.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

Politics and Christianity.

"American Politics and Christian Living" was the subject of Congressman Morse's address at Garfield Memorial Church last Sunday. There was a large audience present, and the address was listened attentively throughout. In the course of his discussion of the subject Mr. Morse delivered an eloquent eulogy on the life of the late Secretary of the Treasury, Windom, and concluded as follows:

In the palace of Versailles I saw a beautiful marble figure representing the last hours of Napoleon at St. Helena, seated in his chair to die. His face is haggard and emaciated with pain and sickness, his hands are bony and fleshless, the muscles of his mouth are drawn and contracted, his eye is growing dim in death, and on his lap is a map of Europe; he died alone. He had put away the only woman he ever loved, the beautiful Josephine. He died a disappointed, heart-broken man, breathing threatenings and maledictions upon his enemies.

Sixty years later there sat another soldier in his chair to die, but an American, Christian, patriot and statesman. Have you read the story of his life and death, and can you doubt that they answer the question before us in the negative? He died surrounded by his family, with the only woman he ever loved weeping by his side. In his pocket was a concealed letter to be found and read by her after his death, to comfort and assuage her grief and containing Christian counsel for his children. On his lips were words of peace and good-will towards those who had been the enemies of their country. On the table were telegrams of condolence and sympathy from these same men, who were his enemies no more.

To the end that his family might not eat the bread of charity, think of his writing his memoirs while that terrible disease was gnawing at his vitals. Faults Gen. Grant had, but does not his life, and especially his death, answer the queston before us most emphatically in the negative?

A few hours ago the telegragph flashed the mournful tidings across the country and across oceans and continents that William Windom was dead. The United States Treasury is draped in mourning, and the land is filled with sorrow at his untimely death, but the great Secretary, who now lies dead on his shield, in this Capital city, awaiting mortuary honors, needs no words of eulogium from me.

Abler pens and more eloquent tongues than mine will recite his virtues and recount his honors and achievements.

He illustrates my subject. He was a Christian statesman. He died as he lived, at the post of duty, died in the zenith of his fame, died with words of wise counsel on his lips to his countrymen at a critical moment in the financial history of the country.

Alas, one by one, our pilots drop from the helm, and men clasp each other's hand and look in each other's faces and say: "Who now shall guide our ship of state?"

In the death of William Windom, President Harrison has lost one of his wisest councillors, the Treasury has lost one of its most efficient Secretaries since the formation of the Government, his family have lost a kind father, an affectionate husband, a man of spotless character. The friends of honor and honesty in public affairs have lost a champion. The nation has lost a statesman, and philanthropy has lost a friend.

Do you desire other illustrations? I point you to a long line of illustrious men, living and dead, which the time allowed for this address forbids me to mention. What! a godly, religious life inconsistent with eminent public service? Have you read the book, have you read that Nebuchadnezzar and Belshazzar found no man so wise in the affairs of state as Daniel, who retired three times a day to pray.

His tow hurt hymn, and he kneaded wrest. He was two tired to raze his fare, pail face. A feint mown of pane rows from his lips.

The made who herd the belle was about to pair a pare, but she through it down and ran with all her mite, for fear her guessed wood not weight. But when she saw the little won, tiers stood in her ayes at the site.

Free Public Library Commission.

The Legislature of 1890, recognizing the great educational value of free public libraries, passed a law designed to encourage every town in the Commonwealth, not already provided with one, to establish such a library. Thus the free text books, with which the public schools are now supplied, may be supplemented by a collection of good literature free for every citizen to read.

The members of the Commission created by the new law desire to be helpful in every way in their power, and they invite every person who has an interest in the formation of a free public library to call upon them, freely, for any advice or assistance at their command.

The members of the Commission are C. B. Tillinghast, State Library, Boston; Samuel S. Green, Free Public Library, Worcester; Henry S. Nourse, South Lancaster; Miss E. P. Sohier, Beverly; and Miss Anna E. Ticknor, 41 Marlborough street, Boston.

The Water Question.

Twice has the city appeared before public bodies in relation to the question of a new water supply and both times its cause has been neglected. A year ago before the legislative committee, the city was left in a ridiculous position by the executive and last Tuesday the same scene was again repeated before the State Board of Health. The new city solicitor and the incumbent of last year were neither one of them notified of the last hearing in time to prepare properly to guard the interests of the city and present its case as it ought to have been and as either one is able to do it. No executive officer, even if he is not favorable to a measure, should allow a matter which has the approval of the City Council, to go by default. The legislative department is entitled to executive support, and the chief magistrate of the city to whom all administrative officers are accountable, should at least request the proper one to appear and represent the city and notify him at the earliest possible moment in order that he may prepare himself.

There is no doubt that the city will be obliged to make out a very strong case in order to be successful at the legislative hearing. Every point must be covered and every fact advanced must be well sustained by evidence of the most convincing character. To do this will require time and great effort on the part of city solicitor. There is only one of two things to be done; either abandon the project altogether, or else present it in its legitimate and proper shape.

The City Council at its next meeting should pass an order or adopt a resolution requesting the Mayor to instruct the city solicitor to prepare and present the city's case before the legislative committee. The dignity of the city should be sustained, and the action of the legislative department faithfully carried into effect, by both the executive and administrative officers.

The order of the leading candidates in the LEDGER popularity contest is somewhat changed this week, although Miss McGovern still leads. Petty Thieving.

Recently a few of the granite firms at South Quincy have missed from their offices postage stamps. These occurrences have been trivial but frequent, and were finally traced to a boy selling DAILY LEDGERS, he being in the habit of helping himself when he found the office vacant. The boy has been admonished that he had best stop such practices or he would soon be dealt with severely. His parents will settle for his rascality.

The Herald would make it appear that many boys were concerned in the robberies, and that the publishers of the DAILY LEDGER were somehow responsible. But the boys are selling for themselves, not for the publishers, and the latter are in nowise responsible. Because one boy has gone wrong other boys must not suffer, and the people will continue to buy the LEDGER which has a larger circulation in Quincy than any other daily.

War of the Roses.

British American Association.

The following is a list of officers of the Quincy Branch No. 33, of the British American Association for the year 1891:

President,—Hugh McPhail.
Vice President,—John C. Stewart.
Secretary,—Thomas C. Carson.
Treasurer,—James Smith.
Sergent at Arms,—Joseph M. Francis.
Door-keeper,—Alexander D. Clements.
Rep. to G. Council,—Hugh McPhail.

Branch meets at Doble's hall, Franklin street, South Quincy, on the first Monday evening of each month.

—A local jeweler of Brockton has just put out a souvenir spoon. It has a gold bowl and silver handle, and on the handle is the word "Brockton" and an excellent representation of a congress shoe. It is a very appropriate and pretty souvenir for visitors to carry away. Why do not some of Quincy's jewelers get up something of the kind with the old Adams' houses or granite quarries on them.

Master Frank C. Walsh, son of Wesley Walsh, of Elm Place, was quite severely bitten Thursday afternoon by a bull dog owned by Dr. Charles H. Davis.

Largest selection Silverware and Clocks for Christmas presents. Williams, West Quincy.

WOLLASTON.

The W. C. T. Union will meet in the Congregational vestry on Friday afternoon, Feb. 13. Devotional services at 2.30; regular meeting at 3 o'clock.

The Wollaston C. L. S. C., will meet with Mrs. Pendleton on Beale street, next Monday evening. This will be the first meeting for some weeks.

On account of the supper and entertainment to be given in the Baptist church, Wollaston, next Tuesday evening, by the W. C. T. U., the class meeting at the Methodist church will be held Wednesday evening at the usual hour.

On Sunday morning, the service of the Unitarian society in the school house, will take the form of a memorial service commemerative of the late Mrs. Badger, and it is hoped by the pastor, that there will be a large attendance of members, in fact the entire society present, out of respect to their departed friend's memory.

The pews for the new Unitarian church are to be of solid oak, comfortable to sit in and of very chaste design. A movement has been originated for the purchase of a bell for the new church, and the enthusiastic member who has the matter in hand is meeting with well deserved and substantial responses to his appeals.

Miss Weston, the talented dressmaker and costumer, so well known to every lady in Wollaston and around, and who a few days ago opened parlors in Perry's block on Newport avenue, is beginning to enjoy quite a boom already.

The Rev. W. S. Key had an audience which literally packed Union hall last Sunday evening, many more having to be turned away for lack of even standing room. He gave the lecture he delivered in the Stone Temple, Dec. 14, 1890, on "The Cathedrals of England," which was greatly enjoyed by the vast crowd. The Wollaston Unitarian church quartette, which is one of the most accomplished quartettes outside of Boston, sang several selections and were well received. It need hardly be said that both lecture and singing were thoroughly enjoyed by every person present, and Mr. Key has accepted an invitation to give another illustrated lecture in Union hall on some Sunday evening during March, to hear which, should the weather be favorable, he is sure to have another packed audience.

The King's Daughters and members of the W. C. T. U., are especially invited to be present, and for whom seats will be reserved. There will be music and songs by the "Y's." Evening service at 7 o'clock. The public invited.

The Rev. B. F. Eaton preached with great acceptance last Sunday morning to the Unitarian society, while Rev. Mr. Key was trying to interest the congregation worshiping in the Universalist church at Weymoth Landing.

The Boston University Glee Club will give the closing entertainment in the M. E. lecture course, Wollaston, the last of this month.

The Wollaston Epworth League met at the parsonage on Thursday evening. Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Freeman made the occasion exceedingly pleasant.

The Elliot Club of Wollaston met with Mrs. Freeman of Grand View avenue, Wednesday evening, and discussed "Carbon: its forms and its uses" under the leadership of Mrs. John Litchfield.

The funeral services over the remains of the late Mrs. William S. Badger of Wollaston were held from her late residence Friday forenoon at half past ten. The services were conducted by the Rev. W. S. Key.

The petition to the Postmaster-General for the establishment of free delivery in Wollaston is a formidable document and contains the names of about all of the leading citizens in the place. Petition appeared in full in Friday's LEDGER

Harry Farrington of Wollaston is dangerously ill with typhoidfever.

Mr. Chandler W. Smith of Wollaston, who has had charge of the retail department of the Chickering piano business has resigned. The Boston Herald in speaking of his resignation says:

"The resignation of Mr. Chandler W. Smith from the management of the retail department of the Chickering piano business will be deeply regretted by his many friends among the musical public of Boston. His courtesy and admirable executive ability have had much to do with the success of the concerts at the Chickering hall, and in many other ways he has added to the pleasures of musical life in Boston."

The regular monthly meeting of the Wollaston Young People's Musical Society was held Monday evening at the residence of Mr. F. H. Bishop on Third Hill. The programme was devoted to the works of Chopin and Franz.

Next meeting, Feb. 16, at the house of Mr. C. A. Pinkham, Warren avenue.

M. E. Church.

Rev. Mr. Freeman will preach in the M. E. church, Wollaston, Sunday morning at 10.45 o'clock. In the evening he will deliver a special sermon before the Young Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

Congregational Church.

The anniversary of the Y. P. S. C. E. will be held in the Congregational church, Wollaston, on Sabbath evening at 6.30 o'clock. There will be an address by the President, David C. Hale, which will be full of interest. There will be a solo by Miss Harriet Lincoln ('Thy Will O Lord be done''), also by Alice Prescott Saxe (I waited patiently for the Lord). There will also be quartette singing and several readings with scripture response. The service will be helpful throughout. All Christian Endeavor societies in the town or in adjoining towns interested in this great work, are very cordially invited.

Sunday School Election.

At the annual meeting of the First Baptist Sunday school of Wollaston, held Tuesday, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year

Superintendent,—Wendell G. Corthell.
Assistant Superintendent,—Frederick E. Litchfield.
Secretary,—Henry F. Gannett.
Treasurer,—Herbert W. Pinkham.
Librarian,—Howard W. Battison.
Assistant Librarian,—William H. Gannett.
Musical Director,—Amos D. Albee.
Organist,—Charles A. Pinkham.
Pianist,—Miss Emma F. Sparrow.
Auditor,—Everett S. Litchfield.

From the secretary's report we learn that the membership of the school is 206, with an average attendance for the year of 135; the largest at any one session being 162.

The treasurer's report showed balance of cash on hand Jan. 1, 1890	$261.09

Received during the year	276.62
Total	$537.71
Expenditures during the year	$417.47
Balance on hand Jan. 1, 1891	$120.24

From the report of the librarian of the Wollaston Baptist Sunday school it appears that during the year about $250 has been expended on the library. About 200 old and worn books were rejected and over 350 new ones added, making the present number 710 volumes. During the additions which have been made to the church edifice a neat and convenient room for the library has been provided.

Idle Gossip.

The Boston Adveiser says in its editorial columns Tuesday morning:

It looks as though a good many people in Quincy ought to be ashamed of themselves for repeating with various embellishments, idle and malicious gossip about one of the oldest and most respected citizens of the city, gossip disbelieved by those chiefly responsible for its circulation, and having no basis of truth.

Watches that have been spoiled by botches restored and warranted. Williams, West Quincy. tf

ATLANTIC.

Several cases of measles are reported among the children of Atlantic.

The King's Daughters are to have a table at the Ladies' fair soon to be held at Atlantic.

Miss Lizzie Glover of Atlantic will spend Sunday and part of next week with friends at Jamaica Plain.

Rev. D. W. Waldron, of Boston, will speak at the Memorial church, Atlantic, Sunday morning, on the work among the poor in Boston. He will tell many strange stories and give some startling facts. All are invited to attend. No collection for the work will be taken at this time, but will be taken later on.

Mr. Percy Hall received the first gentleman's prize from the Harmony whist club and Miss Clara Height, of Neponset carried home the trophy for the ladies. Prizes are awarded the last Monday of each month.

Ralph Redman a prominent young man of Atlantic, has gone to New York where he is to engage in the lumber trade.

An inquest on the death of Cyrus Waterhouse, who was accidently killed by the cars at Atlantic, was held before Judge Humphrey Tuesday.

Mrs. M. M. Battles who has been keeping a boarding house at Atlantic, is to give up business and will move to Weymouth.

The Young Men's Lyceum club of Atlantic are arranging for a dramatic entertainment to be given on Easter Monday night.

Atlantic citizens speak very highly of their newly appointed assessor.

Cadets of Honor.

A new organization called the Cadets of Honor has been formed among the pupils of Memorial Sunday school, Atlantic, meeting every Friday afternoon. Social and moral improvement are its aims. Its motto is the Golden Rule. The general officers are as follows:

Commander,—Emilio Paul.
Vice Commander,—[illegible]
Secretary,—[illegible]
Treasurer,—Harold Moody.
Guard,—Fred Coombs.

The company is divided into two divisions or sub-companies, which are officered as follows:

ARMY CORPS,—Captain, Fred Coombs; Lieutenant, Willie Robinson; Orderly, Herbert Dudley; Color Bearer, Herbert Rand.

RELIEF CORPS,—President, Eva Bassett; Vice President, Emma Shaida; Roll Keeper, Agnes Bennett.

Rev. J. H. Yeoman is the instructor and general manager.

Old Folks' Concert.

The people of Atlantic were treated to an excellent Old Folks' concert at Music hall Thursday evening by the ladies of the Memorial church, which was greatly enjoyed by the large audience present. Of the several numbers on the programme, some were gay and some were funny, and were rendered in a very pleasing manner, those taking part being dressed in the costume of Auld Lang Syne.

The chorus was under the direction of Mr. H. H. Bemis and the soloists were Miss Marian Chase and Mr. Broderick, of Boston, Miss Annie Hall, Mrs. Perkins and Messrs. Owen and Bemis, while Mrs. C. L. Coe officiated as accompanist.

Supposed to Have Been Drowned.

Daniel Cronin, of Neponset, has been missing since last Sunday. On that day he went to Boston and left for home on the 10 o'clock train. He was carried by his station and put off at Atlantic, since which time he has not been seen. Ex-Councilman and Mrs. Harry W. Reed, of Atlantic, came home on that train and saw a man whose description tallies with Cronin's, accompanied by another man who was a stranger, followed them up the street and from the talk of one of the men must have been very much under the influence of liquor. Mr. and Mrs. Reed turned into Prospect street and the two men kept on toward Gurney's store. This is the last heard of him. Cronin's brother has made a diligent search but has learned nothing, but thinks he must have started to walk to Neponset and fell off the bridge into the river. He says his brother has been in this country but about a year and that he was not a drinking man; yet Mr. and Mrs. Reed are positive the man they saw was intoxicated.

Obituary.

On March 30, 1889, Mrs. Fanny S., the beloved wife of Mr. William S. Badger, Winthrop avenue, Wollaston, was stricken with paralysis, which took away the use of all her limbs together with the power of speech and left her a helpless wreck. By the aid of the best of medical skill and good nursing Mrs. Badger's life was spared, though for months after the first attack she lay hovering between life and death. In time she began to show indications of returning consciousness, accompanied with a degree of intelligence, so that she was able to recognize those about her and seemed to display apparant interest in what was going on.

She bore her long affliction in the most patient manner. Several times since she was first seized similiar attacks to the initial one have greatly reduced her remaining vitality. A week from last Saturday she had five epileptic fits in succession, the result of which was to show that the end was not far distant, as these attacks left her completely helpless. On Tuesday morning last, about 9 o'clock, she gently breathed her last, her prolonged sufferings coming to an end as her spirit found the long expected peace and rest.

Mrs. Badger was beloved, for she was of the most vivacious disposition, her spirits always ran high, she being the life and soul of every circle into which she entered. She enjoyed the acquaintance of nearly everyone in the village and a thrill of pain and sorrow ran through the entire community when she was first stricken down. The kindliest, tenderest interest has been felt by all in her long, sad affliction and the most sincere sympathy is now extended to Mr. Badger and his two children, Walter and Sadie, in the hour of their bereavement. The remains were removed to Concord, N. H., Mr. Badger's home, for interment.

PUBLIC DEBT. The public debt statement shows that the decrease of the public debt during the month of January, amounted to $15,835,496.67. Debt, less cash in the treasury Jan. 31, 1891, $846,-595,045 00.

NO LIME IN

Royal Baking Powder

The ROYAL BAKING POWDER is made from Cream of Tartar specially refined and prepared for its use by patent processes by which the Tartrate of Lime is totally eliminated.

This highly important result has been attained only with great care, labor and expense. In money alone a half a million dollars has been invested in patents, machinery and appliances by which the crude Cream of Tartar, being procured direct from the wine districts of Europe, and subjected in this country to these exclusive processes, is rendered entirely free, not only from the objectionable Tartrate of Lime, but from other foreign substances.

This adds greatly to the cost of manufacturing ROYAL BAKING POWDER; but, as all its other ingredients are selected and prepared with the same precise care, and regardless of labor or expense, an article is produced that is entirely free from any extraneous substance, and pure in all respects. The ROYAL contains no ingredients except those certified by the most eminent chemists necessary to make a pure, wholesome and perfect Baking Powder.

It costs more to manufacture the Royal Baking Powder than any other; but it is, as shown by chemical analysis, the only "absolutely pure" Baking Powder made.

New Water Supply.

The State Board of Health gave a hearing in Boston Tuesday afternoon on the plan submitted by the City of Quincy for a new water supply. All the board were present except Messrs. Hasting and Appleton. As Chairman Mills recently said in a letter to the Lawrence people:

"The state board of health is required to consult with and advice the authorities of cities intending to introduce a system of water supply, as to the most appropriate source of supply and the best practicable method of assuring the purity thereof; and such cities are required to submit to the board, for its advice, outlines of their proposed plans in relation to a water supply; and its recommendations and advice must accompany any petition the city may make to the legislature for authority to introduce a supply. The method of the board, after receiving the plans of the city, is to have the subject in all its bearings made a special study by its own engineers, looking to the city to supply local facts and to make the desired investigations of localities. The report of the engineers of the board is then considered by the committee having this subject in charge and conclusions are recommended to the board for its adoption."

It was the

"Local Facts"

Probably, that the board were after on this occasion, and for two hours they listened to the arguments pro and con.

There were present Mayor Fairbanks; Councilmen Newcomb, Bass and Duffield of the Council Committee having the matter in charge; Engineer Blake, who made the study; Councilmen Morton, Pope, Moxom, Fallon, Bryant; ex-Councilmen Federhen, Morse, Faunce, Shaw, Graham, Slade; Representative Burke, City Solicitor Hayes, ex-Commissioner Alexander, H. H. Faxon, A. W. Sprague, A. W. Newcomb, Charles A. Faxon, James Edwards, Warren Rideout, S. A. Merrill, Israel Waterhouse, Henry Chubbuck, William Glennon, F. F. Prescott of the DAILY LEDGER and others.

The Quincy Water Company was represented by Dr. John A. Gordon, Dr. W. L. Faxon, F. E. Hall and others, and a short hand reporter took notes for them.

The water commissioners of Randolph and Holbrook were present, with ex-Governor Gaston and Asa P. French as attorneys.

Milton was represented by J. Walter Bradlee, chairman of the Selectmen.

Engineer Blake

Was presented by Mayor Fairbanks, and took about half an hour to explain the plan, whose story has been given at length in the PATRIOT. Briefly he was satisfied that the source would yield an abundant supply, for the process of saturation was there. Just what the form of construction would be was to be determined later. It was not designed to encroach on the supplies of either Milton, Braintree, Holbrook or Randolph.

Dr. Faxon claimed it would encroach on that of Milton if a dam was built west of the Randolph turnpike, which Engineer Blake said was a misrepresentation. Mr. Faxon also thought the city would be liable for damages for water drawn from Braintree Great pond. He asked more particularly about the borings which had been made, which were satisfactorily answered by Mr. Blake.

William Glennon queried if a dam might not be built across Furnace brook.

Engineer Blake said that would secure a supply of the same inferior quality as that of the present company.

Mr. Glennon claimed it would be

Free From Piggeries

And other contaminations which the company supply had.

Henry H. Faxon opposed a new system. He queried if we would have better water, or if the supply would be abundant. He was one of the largest water takers and had heard no complaints of the water from his tenants.

A. W. Sprague believed health should be considered rather than cost, the present water was not suitable to drink. He enquired of the engineer whether the new supply would be pure.

Engineer Blake believed it would. It was a sterile country, and therefore decayed matter would not enter into it. Then there was no danger from contamination from manufacturing concerns for there were none, and the surrounding territory was very sparsely settled.

Mr. Sprague said his attention had been called to the company's source by an eminent Norfolk County physician, who had said the water must be unhealthy. He had investigated the surroundings and found them as represented.

Dr. Faxon said the company did not now use the well in the flat, or water from the brook. Regarding the nuisances near the reservoir he said there was nothing within 100 feet, the limit fixed by the State.

Ex-Councilman Shaw condemned the present water, and believed the people wanted relief from it.

Dr. John A. Gordon

spoke at length. He reviewed the circumstances of the introduction of a water supply into the city. For years it indefinitely postponed action, and offered no objection to the present company when it started in. As a member of a special committee in 1880 he found Quincy in a deplorable condition, and became one of the water company to introduce a supply. The water was growing better, and at the same time the company was Investigating Filtration.

Then the system could be enlarged for future needs. The two sources being side by side there could not be much difference in quality. No case of typhoid fever in the city the past five years could be traced to the water, where the house used the company water entirely. He desired to know first, if it would be worth while to bankrupt the company, and second, if it would be right to burden the city with two supplies, when it was already overwhelmed with debt. A few years ago the town had tried to buy the works. If they were good enough to buy then, they were now.

Ex-Councilman Shaw denied that Quincy ever wanted to buy, and reviewed the action of the town and city. He regarded the present water unfit to drink. The Local Board of Health

Could not be trusted in condemning well water, for he knew a case where a well of excellent pure water, shown to be so by analysis, had been condemned.

Representative Burke, a member of the Councils of 1889 and 1890, cited repeated refusals of the company to extend mains unless it would pay ten per cent. Quincy wanted good water from good source, where the supply would be inexhaustible.

An attempt had been made to confer with the Company in a business way without success.

Henry H. Faxon believed it was the animus of people who had built in out of the way places, who had started this movement.

Ex-President Federhen believed the hearing should be confined to the question, whether the new supply was pure and inexhaustable, and not bring in the local fights.

Ex-Councilman Slade hoped the Board would not believe in petitions, for, doubtless, one with 400 or 500 names could be secured to hang the State Board of Health. [Hisses and objections, followed by the exit of many citizens.] He reviewed the action of the Council.

Chairman Newcomb of the Council Committee, said the committee and Council were satisfied with the report of Engineer Blake, and there was no animus against the company.

The National Sailors' Home.

We copy from the Boston Traveller the following letter written by our townsmen, Rev. D. M. Wilson, concerning the Sailors' Home, which has of late been brought quite prominently before the public:

"With painful amazement I have just read in the columns of your paper what was there described as a "story" about the National Sailors' Home here in Quincy, "that might well bring the blush of shame to the fair cheek of Massachusett's charity." I have so long and intimately known the Traveller to be a paper of sober and accurate statement, that I cannot but wonder how your reporter was beguiled into making the assertions in that "story." The building is indeed old, inconvenient, and not at all homelike. It was built at the close of the war, when material was costly, when little taste was displayed in practical architecture, and it was built in a hurry. So, compared with the more modern structures used for similar purposes, it is unattractive and awkward. But it is clean. No building of the kind, no home is kept cleaner, and everything is done to make the inmates comfortable. The trustees have long been convinced that the home should be better housed. They have had plans drawn, and seemed at one time on the eve of building. The enterprise, however, has been postponed from time to time, probably for financial reasons. In this unsettled state they have not felt warranted, likely enough in laying out much money in altering the old structure. They have patched the plastering truly, but they have done it neatly, and the past summer the outside of the building was painted, and it was painted inside where needed.

"As to the burial of the remains of the inmates, that is done in an entirely decent and reverent manner. Such persons as are Catholics are, by their own choice, most often attended in their last sickness by a priest of their faith, and their remains interred by the rites of the Catholic church. The services over the remains of others are conducted by chaplain. The casket, draped with the American flag, is deposited in the chapel, the inmates are summoned by the tolling of the bell, the chaplain makes a brief address, reads Scripture, and offers prayer—has the same order of service, indeed, that is made use of at the funerals of his wealthiest parishioners. The remains are then taken in charge by Mr. John Hall, the leading undertaker of Quincy, and interred in a wooded knoll, a beautiful spot, having the bay in full view, a place once the resort of pleasure seekers. The hospital, which the article characterizes as "the dreariest sick room," is a large, airy wholesome hall in the south end of the building, well lighted by windows on three sides. It may be too large and rather plain, but it is kept absolutely clean, its beds are neat and comfortable, and it is well warmed. The patients have excellent medical attendance. I frequently ask the sick if they receive good care, and they invariably answer that they do. Sometimes they will make suggestions as to this or that article of food they want, and these suggestions are always heeded. They seem cheerful and contented, and entirely satisfied with the attentions of Dr. Faxon and grateful for his kindness. Those whose illness is amendable to treatment soon recover. There seems no reluctance to enter the hospital, and no haste to leave it. The death rate is very small, considering the age and outworn condition of the veterans.

"Much is said about the extravagant administration of the affairs of the home. With regard to this matter I know little, nevertheless a good deal of what your reporter listened to seems to be mere assertions, born of ill-will and ignorance. It was stated to him that the chaplain receives $60 per month. As a matter of fact, it is just half that amount. If $1200 is the sum paid the superintendent for his services, it is certainly very far from being an extravagance. Dr. W. L. Faxon is a remarkably able administrator, as his record as surgeon in the army shows, and as the order in the home testifies. He is known in the state as a practical and scientific agriculturist. By his skilful construction of dykes, he has redeemed from the sea many acres of salt marsh, thus adding measurably to the value of the property he has in charge, and by judicious treatment has developed a farm which is one of the best in Quincy. He raises vegetables for the home, furnishes the veterans strawberries and grapes in their season, harvests his own ice, maintains a "milk route," and in all such ways makes the most of the property of the home."

"I have not seen Dr. Faxon or heard from him since the article appeared in your paper. Whether he will take notice of it or not I do not know. But it seemed to me great injustice was being done him and Mrs. Faxon, and that some one among the indignant citizens of this city should express his mind in their behalf. I have been connected with the home some six or eight years, and have a good knowledge of the condition of it. I have been in the rooms of the men; I have been in the kitchen; I visit the hospital at least once a week, and uncleanness is one of the very last attributes I should connect with the house. Always is there good order in it, and such comfort as the condition of the house will permit, and on the whole it is in good condition. The old salts like to live here. Some of them are able to do a little work, and in summer will wander off to seek and fill situations. But with the autumn they return, glad to find so good a port to run into. A new building, however, is needed, and it is to be hoped the generosity of the public will enable the trustees to build soon. If your article leads to that it will not have been written in vain. "All the comforts of a home" can hardly be realized in a building which affords so few conveniences. Nevertheless Dr. Faxon does what he can, and is ably seconded by Mrs. Faxon, who takes a personal interest in the inmates, furnishes them with reading, and in other ways regards their comfort."

MILTON.

East Milton Division Sons of Temperance, received a fraternal visit Tuesday evening from some of the neighboring lodges. The business meeting closed early when the public were invited in, and a pleasing entertainment was given.

The Congregational Sunday school held its annual meeting Sunday and chose the following officers:—Superintendent, Frank Kemp; assistant superintendent, A. W. Sprague; secretary and treasurer, Mrs. H. W. Varney; librarian, William W. Clark; assistant librarian, Miss Maude Eaton.

Mrs. W. H. B. Root, will keep open house next Wednesday evening at her residence on Adams street.

A special town meeting will be held on Friday evening, Feb. 12, to see if the town will accept the act, authorizing towns and cities to lay out a public park; also upon the question of adopting the Australian system of balloting for town officers.

Arthur M. Gardner is quite sick with rheumatic fever.

A very appreciative audience listened to an excellent concert, given at the Congregational church, East Milton, on Tuesday evening last. The programme was one of unusual interest, comprising superior talent. Messrs. Wales and Lincoln rendered several solos, with true and deep sentiment. The Misses Miller contributed a piano duett, which was well received. The violin solo by Master Albert Brackett was greatly enjoyed, and the young artist was forced to return to the platform a second time to satisfy the audience. The readings by the Misses Shattuck and McConnell were particularly enjoyable, and their selections received the hearty applause which they merited, and so delighted the audience, that they were recalled several times. Misses Shattuck and McConnell are pupils of the Boston school of Oratory, and are both possessed of exceptional ability. The concert closed with a skilful rendering of "Oh! who will over the Downs" by Misses Cook, Hunt, Messrs. Wales and Lincoln.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 4, 1891.

Mr. Quincy of Quincy is one of the most active members of the House in originating legislation. A part of the orders he has introduced this week are on the following subjects:

To amending the Constitution so as to allow the decision of contested elections to be vested in the courts;

To amending the Constitution so as to allow a new division of cities into wards after the taking of the decennial State census and upon the basis of the figures of such census;

To repealing the provisions of sections 104 and 105, chapter 423, acts of 1890, relative to recounts of votes, or of amending the same so as to further restrict the right to demand such recounts;

To memorializing Congress in favor of amending the Constitution of the United States so as to provide for the election of United States Senators by direct popular vote;

To providing for the appointment of a special commission to prepare a draft of an act or acts embodying the principles of the so-called Torrens or Australian system for the registration by the State of land titles, so that the same are made indefeasible and transferable by certificate instead of by deed, with any modifications of such system or additional provisions incidental thereto or changes in the present law desirable in order to conform therewith which such commission may deem advisable.

The State Board of Arbitration and Conciliation has a very interesting report to make as to the effectiveness of arbitration as a method of settling industrial difficulties, compared with strikes and lockouts. While the task of the arbitrator is often difficult and thankless, yet it has been very effective for the beneficial settlement for both parties of the troubles which have occurred between them. It is a notable fact that not a single strike during the past year has succeeded, which of itself will carry its warning. Employers have found it possible by means of combinations to counteract the influences of the trades-unions and other combinations of the employes, and so there is no prospect ahead that the workmen can oppose force to force with more success than in the past.

A petition has been presented that the State buy the sword which was worn by George Washington when he resigned his commission. A statement is made that $20,000 was refused for it in 1852.

Important changes in the interest of the labor element are proposed in the weekly payment law, such as striking out the exemption for railroads at the consent of the commissioners, and of cities at the consent of the employes. The penalties are doubled for violation and also the period within which complaint may be made.

Great interest is being developed in the amendment for biennial elections, and the opposition is making a much stronger front than last year. On Thursday the friends of the amendment had a chance, and they put forward Theodore C. Bates, who is probably the most active worker for the cause this year, Col. E. H. Haskell, who has always taken great interest in it, ex-Governor Robinson, Henry L. Pierce, E. W. Burdett, Henry Parkman and others. On Friday the opposition took their turn, and their chief spokesmen were E. M. Chamberlain, George E. McNeill, James H. Mellen and other representatives of the labor interests, nationalists, knights of labor, socialists, christian socialists, sailors' union, American federation of labor, and so on among organizations of that class. These latter seem to have a great dread of losing their opportunity for an annual election, and are extremely earnest in their statements. They say they believe a majority of the people are with them, but they fear to let the question go to a popular vote because the capitalists and newspapers have so much better opportunity for carrying on the campaign. Most of the advocates of the change are Republicans and the opponents are not, but Mayor Alger of Cambridge, Democrat, spoke for the amendment, and a Republican lawyer of Lowell opposed it. Mr. Mellen charged that a job was being put up by which the biennial and poll tax amendments were to stand or fall together.

As the session wears on the effectiveness of the agitation against the lobby is evident, though it does not yet appear just how the law will be evaded, nor what amendments will be necessary to continue its effectiveness. Its strength now lies in the publicity given to the lobby, in the watchfulness over their movements and in the sensitiveness of public opinion to corrupt influence upon legislation. Last year's rule keeps the members of the lobby from the floor of the House. The law passed as a result of the West End investigation has repressed the forwardness of lobby members. Yet most of the regulars, with the exception of Tom Marsh, have been at the State House this year and some of them have attended hearings before the Railroad Committee, just as if they had been retained by their old employers. One of the most experienced of them assures me that he proposes to conform to the law and that he will work squarely and honestly under it; that he will register and stand on his legal footing as recognized by last year's law. Without question the law must have much effect at present. Of course ways will be found for evading it, but though the members may be liable to pressure from lobbyists outside of the State House, it is no small gain to have the lobby's operations in it checked. It is something to have driven the money-changers from the temple. The problem is to keep them out.

Legislative hearings are in full blast now and the people flock to the State House in large numbers to make their wants known. Biennial elections, also, woman suffrage, fining for imperfect weaving and other popular matters have already been heard. No opposition was made to the passage of the oleo bill and those who have been at the hearings on that side in previous years were absent. The report is that the oleo men will rest their case on the decision of the United States Supreme Court on a similar law in another State, that it was unconstitutional and will let the bill go through this year, feeling sure that it will be declared unconstitutional.

Only one hearing has been taken by the women suffragists. The Green Room was filled as usual and Mr. Blackwell and his wife and William Lloyd Garrison were the chief managers of the case, as they have been in the past. They made their plea in one session of the committee and the opponents put in their testimony and arguments in documentary form, taking none of the time of the committee. By long custom this committee is supposedly made up favorable to the petitioners and so it is to be expected that they will get their bill to give municipal suffrage to women. Then the tug of war will come on passing the bill.

Representatives who come from the governor's room report that Gov. Russell is very suspicious of political points being played upon him and does not conceal his feelings as much as it would be policy for him to do.

The state pension office is cutting into the business of the pension agents, because it does all the work without charging any fee whatever. Many veterans and women do not seem to be aware of this, and so Col. J. B. Parsons, the state pension agent, is at the trouble to make the case clear in his annual report which has just been issued. He says that the business of his office has greatly increased since the passage of the dependent pension act, and that it is impossible to tell when it will fall off again. In the year 2089 applications were received, 1484 under the new law, and 605 under the old. There were granted 265 claims and 86 were rejected. The amount of collections by the office was $87,869.

Senator Champlin of Suffolk is proposing an investigation into the expenses of the State Normal schools, but it does not yet appear what his motive is, nor what he expects to disclose.

He has also offered an order for an investigation by the legislature of the charge by Mayor Matthews of Boston, that Police Commissioner Osborne has made improper use of his official position. The letters of Matthews and Osborne to the governor and council, each asking for an investigation, have been laid over to the council meeting next week. RULE.

District Court, Quincy

Thomas McDalin, of Randolph, drunk $8.

Isaac L. Withey, of Braintree, drunk $10.

Frank Birch, of Quincy, drunk $8.

The case of John McAuliffe, one of the two men from Randolph who accused Messrs. Lynch and Griffin of stealing a watch, the account of which appeared in the LEDGER, came up for hearing. McAuliffe, having the watch in his possession, was arrainged for stealing the same. The first witness was Carroll who said the watch had not been stolen and that he gave it to McAuliffe. This being in direct opposition to what he had already told the officers, his Honor ordered him arrested for perjury. Messrs. Lynch and Griffin were the next witnesses and their story was that on the night in question they were walking home from Hall's stable when they were hailed by Carroll and McAuliffe, who asked to be shown to a place on Canal street. This they did and when they arrived there were accused of stealing the watch. What followed was told in the LEDGER's story on Thursday. After hearing the evidence he was held in $300 for his appearance at the Superior Court in April next.

William Quinn, John Dunn, William Riley and John Clark of West Quincy were arraigned for throwing snow balls and fined $3 each.

William Karney of Randolph, drunk, $10.

☞ Miss Heloise E. Hersey will speak on "Tolstoi" at the next meeting of the New England Wheaton Seminary Club, which will be held on Saturday, St. Valentine's day, at the Thorndike, Boston. Some fine music in the way of pianoforte and vocal solos is also promised.

National Sailors' Home.

By inmates of the Sailors' Home, in this city, we have been asked to print the following letter, written by old sailors who think they know what they are talking about.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

In the DAILY LEDGER of Jan. 28th an article appeared in relation to the National Sailors' Home and its management, written by one who it is claimed is an expert in that line, but which, if not in some respects corrected, might convey to some the impression that the inmates at this institution live in a veritable paradise; and that their dead shipmates, on account of the beautiful grove in which they are buried, ought to be transcendantly happy. But we, who live at the Home at this time, desire to express our opinions on the points to which he alludes, and on others that he seems to have studiously avoided on his tour of inspection.

He states that all the rooms were scrupulously clean, and that the hallway, the chapel, in fact every room in the building, had the same remarkably clean and ship shape appearance; such as is seldom found outside of a man-of-war. We fully endorse his description of the general cleanliness of the building, for the inmates always keep it so. He then, in a glowing manner, describes the surrounding scenery of the cemetery, about which he states so much talk has been made, as located on a knoll washed by the waves of Quincy bay.

Now, why all that fulsome twaddle? It will not divert public attention; neither can it gloss over, or cover up, the glaring defects in the management of this Home, or the shameless manner in which seventy-two veterans of the United States navy are buried. The government will furnish headstones free of charge; and will, if desired, inscribe on them the name of the deceased, age and date of death, the branch of service—army or navy—yet forty out of forty-one headstones in that cemetery have inscribed on them simply and alone the veteran's name and age. Date of death not being mentioned, and no recognition of service whatever. Let the reader come with me to the other headstone; examine it carefully on each side—what do we find? Nothing but a blank headstone, without an inscription of any kind. Yet it stands there, a dumb mockery to the dead it should commemorate,—a nameless headstone to the unknown dead. Farther on we come to the graves of thirty-one other veterans, buried in a more shameless manner than the ones previously mentioned, for nothing but unpainted pine wood stakes mark their graves; with no name or number to indicate who the dead are.

Mr. Faxon's statement in a Quincy paper is that they have been removed by the weather, but will be renewed in the spring; and yet for twelve years he has allowed these thirty-one graves to remain unmarked, when he could get headstones from the government by sending for them. The sentiment in the lines "For what he was and all he dared remember him today" seems not as yet to have touched a responsive chord in the breast of the powers that be at this Home.

No prosy writing in defense of those who are responsible for this can condone it. The cemetery required no such far away description as the writer referred to indulged in. The cemetery is all out-doors, in God's broad sunlight, right here in the historic old town of Quincy. We desire that the citizens of Quincy visit it and see for themselves the truth of this statement If the persons who are responsible for this gross neglect can properly name and locate the dead buried there, then we shall be forced to consider them men of gigantic brains, with a retention of memory bordering on the miraculous.

Mr. Faxon states that letters to inmates are not opened as described. Now, we care not about his method of opening letters, but we do know he has no right to open the letters of pensioners, who pay the so-called board; but he does, and has for years opened such letters belonging to the inmates.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels. Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Distress After Eating

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

SATURDAY, FEB. 7, 1891.

After All.

BY SUSAN COOLIDGE.

Grief is strong, but joy is stronger;
Night is long, but day is longer.
When life's riddle solves and clears,
And the angels in our ears
Whisper the sweet answer low
(Answer full of love and blessing),
How our wonderment will grow
At the blindness of our guessing;
All the hard things we recall
Made so easy—after all!

Earth is sweet, but heaven is sweeter;
Love complete, but faith completer;
Close beside our wandering ways,
Through dark nights and weary days,
Stand the angels with bright eyes;
And the shadow of the cross
Falls upon and sanctifies
All our pain and all our loss.
Though we stumble, though we fall,
God is helping—after all!

Sigh then, soul, but sing in sighing,
To the happier things replying;
Dry the tears that dim thy seeing.
Give glad thoughts for life and being;
Time is but the little entry
To eternity's large dwelling.
And the heavenly guards keep sentry,
Urging, guiding, half-compelling,
Till the puzzling way quite past,
Thou shalt enter in—at last!

A real estate syndicate to erect cottage houses is talked of in Brockton.

There were fifteen fires in Abington during 1890, ten of which were probably incendiary.

Middleboro is trying to get the Smith American Organ Co. to locate its works in that town.

Auditor Ladd says that the State tax this year will be only $1,500,000, or $250,000 less than it was last year.

Brockton shipped more shoes away last year than ever before, having made a handsome gain, Our county city is unquestionable the shoe city of Massachusetts.

It is proposed to dedicate the Standish monument the last of July or first of August this year, and it is hoped President Harrison will be present. The monument is practically finished outside.

A Taunton man, who is so sick that his physician has ordered him to stay in doors after sundown, is represented to be drawing just $168 a week from sundry beneficial societies.

W. L. Douglas, ex-mayor of Brockton, recently received a letter that bore no address whatever on the envelope, except a portrait of himself, cut from some newspaper advertisement. The letter was sent as the result of a bet between two men. The wager was a pair of Douglas' $4 shoes, to be received in case the letter was safely delivered to Mr. Douglas.

It has been costing New Bedford about $300 a month for several months to support its city forester's department, and the big increase in the bills leads the Mercury of that city to ask knotty questions and quote scripture and poetry at the boss woodchopper. This is one of the evils of having streets encumbered with trees. In Brockton they have cut them about all down. This enables them to go without shade and a city forester.

A NEW MAGAZINE. The Doll's Dressmaker, a magazine for girls, is the latest periodical to come to our notice. It is brimful of entertaining and instructive reading and illustrations for our little women, and will be welcomed in every household which possesses a little girl. We feel sure the little magazine will be popular with mothers and prove a monthly delight to their young daughters. The price is only fifty cents per year. We recommend parents to send and subscribe. It is published at 35 East Seventy-seventh street, New York city. Send for a sample copy anyhow.

Household Receipts.

GINGER CAKES. Two cups of molasses, one of melted butter and lard mixed, one heaping cup of brown sugar, two teaspoonfuls of cinnamon, three of ginger, a little grated nutmeg and enough flour to make it stiff enough to roll out; roll very thin; cut in round cakes and bake in a quick oven.

PUDDING SAUCE. To three large tablespoonfuls of nice brown sugar, put a large tablespoonful of butter and half a one of flour; stir all together in a bowl until white, then add a gill of boiling water and stir until all is melted, then set it on the stove just long enough to boil up. Add rosewater, a few drops of lemon juice, or a little extract of vanilla.

BAKED BATTER PUDDING. Allow a pint of cold milk, four tablespoonfuls of flour, two eggs and a little salt. Stir the flour smooth in a part of the milk, then put in the eggs without first beating and beat them well with the mixed flour. Then add the remainder of the milk and the salt and when well stirred together pour it into a buttered dish and bake it half an hour. When it is done the whole top will have risen up, for so long as there is a sunken spot in the centre it is not baked enough. This makes a pudding for four or five persons. It will not be light unless it is put into the oven immediately on being made. Serve with a liquid sauce.

PLAIN STEWED BEEF. Take a square piece of beef from the best part of the round, weighing four or five pounds, and put it into water enough to cover it. When the water has been well skimmed, put in salt, two small turnips—yellow are best—two carrots and two onions chopped small, and, if liked, a half-dozen cloves.

Boil very gently four or five hours. A short time before dinner add a teaspoonful of sweet marjoram or some chopped parsley half a cup of tomato ketchup or a cup of strained canned tomato, and a tablespoonful of flour. Serve in a deep dish. This is an economical dish; the beef is good cold, and the soup excellent.

Anecdotes.

Old lady—"Are your shoes all made on anatomical principles, boy?"

Boy—"No, mum; they're all made on lasts."

Funny Frenchman (to ostler who is rubbing down his horse)—"Pat, I'm afraid your currying favor with that horse."

Ostler—"Faith, no! I'm merely scrapin' an acquaintance."

In a Texas school—(small boy holding up his hand)—What's B. C. hitched onter them dates in Greek history mean?

Teacher (a trifle confused)—Well-er, Sammie, you see them old Greeks were queer kind of creeters, so when they didn't know a date for sartin they put B. C., "'bout correct," arter the numbers.

Mr. Wickwire—"This is going to be a cold winter. I feel it in my bones."

Mrs. Wickwire—"That's the first time I knew you believed in the goose bone theory."

"John," said a wife to her husband, "what a goose you are. I really believe you cannot tell a yard of gingham from a cargo of brick. Here you have brought me ten cakes of that nasty, yellow, rosin soap when I told you to be sure and bring Brussels. Don't you believe in economy?"

Boston Theatres.

Hollis Street.

Today is the last of "Cleopatra," and much to the regret of theatre-goers, for it is one of the most beautiful plays given in Boston this season. Next week however a great attraction is offered for the Kendals are announced to appear in "The Squire," a play written expressly for them and produced by them at the St. James theatre, London. Boston people have often heard of this piece as the best in Mr. and Mrs. Kendal's repertoire, and now they will have a chance to judge for themselves. The regular Hollis street prices will be raised somewhat during the engagement of the Kendals, and seats are now on sale.

Globe.

Following Rose Coghlan at the Globe, comes Henry E. Dixie fresh from triumphs in the West. Mr. Dixie is one of Boston's favorite comedians and a crowded house and warm welcome is assured him. "The Seven Ages" was presented here last winter and has been almost over our country since then and met with gratifying success, In small details it has been much improved and the chorus is one of the prettiest on the stage today. Seats are now on sale at the regular prices.

Boston Museum.

Next Tuesday night at the Museum will be the fiftieth performance of "Betty's Finish" and "The Solicitor." Notwithstanding the long run of these bright farcial comedies the house continues to be packed every evening, while the ladies and children attend the matinees en masse. The plays will run a while longer as the public seems to demand it.

Tremont.

"The City Directory" has met with good success the past week and will run but one week longer. Although the play is familiar to many, being played here before, yet those who saw it before are the ones who are the most eager to see it again, which speaks well for the play. Annie Pixley will be the next attraction.

Ten Days' Trip.

The Georgia-Alabama Investment and Development Company are receiving so many applications from people who desire to visit Tallapoosa and investigate the merits of their properties as an investment, that they have decided to run a select limited excursion from Boston on Feb. 17.

The excursion train will consist of four Pullman sleepers, dining car, a parlor, smoking car, a barber shop, bath room, library, and all conveniences of modern travel, and baggage car, vestibuled throughout, and will run the entire trip of ten days as a special train. The route will be by the N. Y. & N. E., Pennsylvania & Piedmont Air Line railroads, through the picturesque Piedmont region of the south, in sight of the great battlefields. Ample opportunity will be afforded in Washington for the excursionists to inspect the cit visit Congress, etc., and for sight-seeing in Atlanta, Birmingham, and Anniston.

The number of excursionists will be limited to one hundred, and applications for sleeper accommodations will be booked in the order received. The special train will be the finest equipped and most magnificent that can be procured in America, and it is intended to make the excursion one select in every particular, and no expense will be spared to make the trip a delightful one to all who shall accompany it.

The rate for this excursion has been made at $75.00 per passenger, which includes railroad fare, sleeping car, carriage drives, meals, and every expense for the entire trip. Ladies are especially invited, and a considerable number have already signified their intention of going.

Gen. Benj. F. Butler, President of the company, will accompany the excursion, it being his first visit south of Richmond since the war.

It is intended to make the excursion a select and delightful one in every particular and no pains or expense will be spared by the company to make it a trip long to be remembered by those who accompany it.

Applications for sleeping accommodations should be made as soon as possible to the Boston office of the company, James W. Hyatt, treasurer, Globe building. Under the terms by which the special limited train is chartered, the number must be confined strictly to one hundred.

The Greatest Lamp in the World.

The most powerful artificial light in existence is the property of the English government, and it is to be found in the Isle of Wight. The lamp referred to is that of the lighthouse of St. Catherine's Point, where there is also a large fog-horn. The plant has three engines of thirty-six horse power each. Two of these are used for working the dynamos, and the other for the fog-horn. The current is conducted by wires across a road direct from the dynamos to the lamps, there being no accumulators.

The light is obtained from a carbon lamp of special pattern. The ordinary light is equal to 3,000,000 candles, but a light of 6,000,000 candle-power can be and has been obtained. It is impossible for any one who has not seen it to imagine the wonderful brilliancy of the light, but some idea may be formed from the fact that it can be distinctly seen forty-five miles away, and that at the Needles, fourteen miles distant, it is quite easy to read very fine print by means of the reflection.

On one side of the lamp-room is a quantity of very thick glass for repairing the windows broken, not by storms so much as by wild ducks and sea birds, which are attracted by the light. A singular feature of the lighthouse tower is a plummet and line hanging from the ceiling of a lower chamber, the plummet pointing to a spot on the floor. This is for the purpose of enabling the man in charge to tell when the tower is out of the perpendicular. The lighthouse was built on an under cliff, formed by a gigantic landslip which occurred in 1799, and some portions of this cliff are still slipping.—New York Journal.

OF INTEREST TO WRITERS.

A Labor Saving Invention Indispensable to all who Write.

Of the many valuable improvements which have been made in self-feeding pens a great part are due to the skill and persistence of Mr. L. E. Dunlap, of Boston, who, as a pioneer in this business, has spent the last decade in perfecting the fountain pen that bears his name. The latest perfected invention is the Dunlap Double-feed Pen, and in this very double-feed lies the secret of its success.

It carries a sixteen-karat diamond-pointed gold pen, and once filled with any common writing-ink will hold enough to write 10,000 words; it is deservedly popular among writers who want a pen that will invariably write when its point is touched to paper. This pen is a perfect pocket companion that will not only prove indispensible, but a joy and blessing as long as life lasts. It is guaranteed to write instantly, always and under all circumstances. To introduce it among the readers of this paper, the manufacturers offer for a short time only to send it by return mail at one-half the regular price.

By posting a letter, enclosing a two-cent stamp, to the Dunlap Pen Company, 280 Washington street, Boston, Mass., you will receive a beautifully engraved ticket worth $2, and also an illustrated price-list and circular, telling you how to make $5 per day.

An opportunity to purchase the best fountain and gold pen made, at less than half its actual value, the gold pen alone being worth the price asked for the whole, is one that should not be allowed to pass by ungrasped and become one of the "might-have-beens" of life.

Temeprance.

Furnished for Publication by W. C. T. U.

Lady Henry Somerset.

It was voted at the convention of the National W. C. T. U. in Atlanta, Ga., to suggest to all the auxiliaries of the World's W. C. T. U. the desirableness of holding a session of that society next November in Boston, when the next session of the National W. C. T. U. is held. Lady Henry Somerset, president of the British Woman's Temperance Association, is expected to visit the United States in order to attend the convention. Lady Somerset is the eldest daughter of Earl and Countess Somers of Eastnor Castle, Ledbury, Herefordshire, Eng., and was married in 1872 to Lord Henry Somerset, second son of the Duke of Beaufort. Having no brother Lady Somerset succeeded to the inheritance of the vast estate of her father. She has large possessions in the heart of London, as well as in the beautiful hill country of Herefordshire, her tenants there numbering nearly one hundred thousand. At the very threshold of her philanthropic work for her tenants, she was confronted with the terrible drink problem, which has made her an ardent advocate of total abstinence.

The poplarity of the president of the Mass. W. C. T. U., Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, is shown in the cordial welcome that has been extended to her at the county conventions. The work for a National constitutional prohibitory amendment was presented at these conventions, and is being vigorously pushed in all parts of the State. This work is in harmony with the joint resolution presented to the last Congress.

Nationalism.

Capt. E. S. Huntington, of Wollaston, has in The New Nation, a new paper just started in Boston, an able article under the heading of "The Grand Army of Peace." Among other things he says, "Critics of nationalism in condemning the plan of an industrial army have had a great deal to say about the horrors of what they are pleased to term a form of military despotism. Are the wage-earning producers so happy, then, under the system we have truly depicted, that they fear so slight a beneficent discipline as would exist under an order founded upon regularity and exactness? It will be useful to imagine the life of an average workman, to trace his career from youth to manhood and to old age. We shall find him subjected to the worst sort of discipline during his whole industrial life; when old age arrives, if he has been frugal, this toiler's reward for a life of slavery may possibly consist of an humble freehold, with enough ready money to pay his funeral expenses, leaving to his children the same weary round. During his desolate life, no want beyond the mere physical has been satisfied; no chance for intellectual culture has come to him; his political opinions have been confined within the narrow bounds of a mistaken zeal for interests not his own; and his ignorance, alone, has given him content."

Better Off Than He Knew.

A man who was eating a large, raw carrot stopped a woman on Duffield street and said:

"Madam, could you give me ten cents to buy food with?"

"Why, you seem to have plenty," she answered.

"Raw carrot—see?" he said, as he extended it.

"Yes, but don't you know that raw carrot contains 93 per cent, of clear nutriment against only 33 in mince pie or plum pudding. You ought to be thankful, sir,—very thankful.—Detroit Free Press.

Penny Wise But Pound Foolish.

Once a merchant, who had an eye single to great profits and regarded not the wants of his patrons, undertook to induce a customer to take some of Dusenbury's soap. "What you say may be all true," said the customer, "but my wife does not want that soap, and as you have not got Brussels soap I'll step in next door and get it," which he did. And ever after he traded at the place where could be found the economical Brussels soap and other desirable household articles.

Back From Town.

Old friends allus is the best,
Halest-like and heartiest;
Knowed us first, and don't allow
We're so blame much better now!
They were standin' at the bars
When we grabbed "the kivvered kyars"
And lit out fer town, to make Money—and that old mistake!

We thought then the world we went Into beat "The Settlement,"
And the friends 'at we'd make there
Would beat any anywhere!
And they do—fer that's their b'iz:
They beat all the friends they is—
'Cept the raal old friends like you.
'At staid home, like I'd ort to!

W'y, of all the good things yit
I ain't shet of, is to quit
Business, and git back to sheer
These old comforts waitin' here—
These old friends; and these old hands
'At a feller understands;
These old winter nights, and old
Young folks chased in out of the cold!

Sing "Hard Times 'll come ag'in
No More!" and neighbors all jine in!
Here 's a feller come from town
Wants that-air old fiddle down
From the chimbly! Git the floor
Cleared fer one cowtillion more!—
It 's poke the kitchen fire, says he,
And shake a friendly leg with me!

Miscellany.

VICTIM OF A VALENTINE.

"It's beautiful!" said Felix, "beautiful."

On his way to the mill where he was the director of a half a hundred hands, he had suddenly paused. The drug store was the only place in town where valentines were sold, and it was at the window of the drug store he stood. Within the cardboard box lay the article which had won his admiration. It was of blue plush. It was veiled with lace paper. There was a good deal of narrow, pink satin ribbon about it. Some artificial rosebuds were pinned in one corner, and the verse in gold script upon it said all the most diffident lover could desire to say, or have said for him.

"It would tell her everything," said young Denslow, "everything."

By the pronoun it will perhaps be perceived that there was only one woman in the world for the handsome young foreman of the Meadowlark Mills.

Through the dingy glass he re-read the lines which seemed so admirably to voice his sentiments:

"I dare not speak the love I feel
But may this valentine reveal
The truth to you,
Whose eyes of blue
Have pierced my poor heart
Through and through."

Perhaps a critic might have protested that the verse lacked poetic excellence, that it did not possess the lifting meter of Locker, or the silvery ripple of Dobson. But Felix Denslow was not a critic. He went into the drug store.

"How do, Tom?" he said, with a friendly nod to the clerk, with whom he was acquainted. "Let me see some valentines."

Though his mind was quite made up, he glanced through the contents of the tray set before him. And then, with all the indifference he could muster, said he guessed he would take the one in the window. Suddenly he was struck with a sinister doubt. What if Effie should think it was sent by that idiot of a Dick Griffith, who was ridiculously devoted to her, and would be sure to send her a valentine? But he would not have the presumption to send one which so openly expressed adoration. That he might be considered presumptions for so doing, never occurred to Felix, which proves how unreasonably in love that young fellow was.

He threw the clerk five dollars to take the change out of, and stood leaning against the counter, knitting his straight black brows, and pulling perplexedly at his mustache. "She is so sweet," he said to himself; "no end of impudent chaps will be sending her valentines. And I want her to know this is from me. I have it! I'll write my name on the back. It isn't customary to do so on a valentine, I know. But it is the only sure way."

He took out his pencil, turned the big card over and wrote his name boldly on the back. Then he replaced it in the box, put on the lid and handed it to the clerk to wrap up. Just then a boy, breathless and scared came tearing in.

"Oh Mr. Denslow!" he cried, "I've been a-huntin' you. "There's been a accident up to the mill. Jerry Greggs, he's been caught in the machinery, an' the boss he wants you an' a doctor right away."

Felix started up.

"All right. Here, Tom, address that and send it for me, will you? I can't wait.

Tom nodded.

Denslow fumbled through his pocket, jerked out a square of card-board and tossed it on the counter. "That's the name and address," he said.

He dashed out, and off toward the mill as fast as legs could take him.

And Tom Dixon, with pen in hand, stood staring at the card he held. At first his look was one of blank amazement, that gradually changed to a grin. He chuckled as he copied on the box the name and number on the card.

"Going in for her, is he? I didn't think Denslow was the kind of fellow to sell himself, but one can't always exactly tell."

At the mill Felix found the accident less serious than he had anticipated.

On his way home that evening he looked in at the drug store.

"Send that, Tom?"

Very peculiarly Tom acted. He winked. He sidled towards his questioner. He gave him a sly dig in the ribs.

"Yes I sent it. Oh, you rascal! I'd never have thought it!"

"You're deucedly stupid, then," retorted Felix, in exasperation. "It has been plain as the nose on your face—and that's plain enough—this many a day. Oh, stop your guying!" And he flung out and off, leaving Tom laughing at his touchiness.

The following day was gloomy, murky, and threatened rain. But Denslow's dreams were all rose-colored. It was St. Valentine's Day. Effie Terrisford would receive his valentine. He would meet her at the dance that evening, and endeavor to discover, from her reception of him, what his chances were. The valentine would have said so much for him that, if he fancied she was not displeased, he would pluck up courage and "speak right out."

It would be hard to find a handsomer specimen of manhood than Felix Denslow, when, that evening, he got his stalwart self into his snowy linen and black diagonal.

He was a little late arriving at the hall, where the annual dance, in honor of the saint of lovers, was to be held. Instantly his glance sought and found pretty Effie Terrisford.

She was a plump girl of eighteen or twenty. She had rosy cheeks, brown hair and velvety blue eyes. And she wore a dainty new gown of creamy lace and pale gold ribbons.

How very charming she did look, Denslow thought. But she was talking with that abominable Dick Griffith. Well, he would soon take her from him. He crossed the hall to them. He bestowed a slight nod of recognition on Griffith, and then turned smilingly to Effie, and asked her for a dance.

But Effie, who ordinarily blushed and dimpled at his coming, acknowledged his greeting with a most frigid bow.

"I haven't a dance left," she said coolly.

She did not offer to show him her programme.

"What?" stammered Denslow aghast, "already?"

"I only dance the square dances, you know," she said, "and I've promised two of those to Mr. Griffith, and the others to Will Davis, and my cousin."

Denslow became conscious he was staring at her in a fashion she might resent. Indeed he was dazed. She must be angry with him for presuming to send her a valentine. She probably considered it an impertinence. He did not look at Dick Griffith, but he could fancy the exultation in his little twinkling eyes. He crimsoned, bowed, moved away.

He felt that he had made a mistake, that the evening he had looked forward to was to be a failure, and was moreover, convinced that life—his life—was not worth living.

He passed unheeding many bright faces which would have willingly smiled upon the prosperous young foreman of the Meadowlark Mills. He found himself a secluded seat and took possession of it. He resigned himself to a melancholy reverie.

"Oh, Mr. Denslow! have I found you? What has made you so very late?" gushed a sharply bland voice that made him think of sweetened vinegar.

He looked up; rose. Before him stood a lady of forty forlorn and unappropriated years. She was very angular, very sallow. She was in brick-colored satin and tulle, and jewelry and ornaments innumerable."

"I've wanted so much to see you," she said, dropping her voice to a confidential purr, "to thank you for the charming valentine you sent me."

And she beamed upon him with an affectionate gratitude that was embarrassingly sincere.

"The—eh—what?" he stammered.

"The valentine,"—still more sweetly; "and the sentiment upon it so beautiful."

Denslow groaned. The truth had flashed across his brain. Some weeks previous Miss Skelton had given him the card of her restaurant, requesting that he send there any of the mill hands who wished board. For though a rich woman, as wealth was estimated in Delphos, Miss Skelton was an exceedingly avaracious one, and worked hard to add to her store; perhaps to have ample means to buy a husband if she were unable to win one. And Felix now knew that in his haste he must have flung that card to Tom Dixon, instead of the one Effie Terrisford had left at his house when she called on his sister, and which he had taken because the name upon it had been written by his sweetheart.

"I hope," cooed on Celestia Skelton, timidly lifting her eyes, "you will not think me lacking in maiden modesty if I confess that I have long hoped for, indeed expected, a revelation of the—the secret."

"Great Scott! You have!"

He could feel himself growing chilly, damp. What was she about to say next?

"Yes—Felix. And,"—trying her best to blush, "I need not say that the—affinity expressed in the exquisite verse is reciprocated."

"But," cried Denslow, making a bold break for liberty, and feeling that he must escape emeshment at any price, "I didn't send you any valentine."

"Sir!"

"I'm awfully sorry," blurted on Felix, "but I was in a rush, and I asked Tom Dixon to address the box for me, and I gave him the wrong card in mistake. I meant to send it to Effie Terrisford."

"What?" quavered Celestia, "that little snip! Why I showed her the—the valentine, and—"

"Oh, you did!"

Now the reason of Effie's coolness was apparent.

"Yes, sir. And if you consider your conduct a joke, sir, I don't, sir. It is unbecoming a gentleman, sir. Never presume to address me again, sir. Good-evening, sir!"

Off she flounced. Denslow sought out Effie. He insisted on a hearing. He explained the mistake of the valentine. He offered himself then and there. And he was accepted.

"But if you knew how I felt," declared Effie, half tearfully, half smilingly, "when that horrid old thing was showing off her valentine—oh dear!"

"And if you could appreciate my feelings when I saw you with that detestable Griffith—darling!"

But neither wasted any sympathy on the unfortunate victim of their valentine—Miss Celestia Elmira Skelton.

Boarder:—"Mrs. Toughsteak, I shall send the expressman after my collar box and cane." Landlady:—"What are you leaving us for, Mr. Slim?" Boarder;—"Because you have replaced the Brussels soap that was in my room with that of an inferior grade."

Castle Garden has been turned over to New York at last and will be placed in charge of the Park Commission.

Where Spices Grow

AND WHERE BANANA, COCOANUT, BREAD-FRUIT AND PALM TREES WAVE.

After the announcement which appeared in the newspapers throughout the country, several months ago, to the effect that there was to be a great International Exhibition at Kingston, in Jamaica, W. I., little was heard of the project until, after a time, the Boston Fruit Company organized a New England Committee on the Exhibition, and generously offered to run its steamers around to Kingston and carry all New England exhibits to Jamaica free, and return them on the same terms.

Such a generous action deserved the heartiest co-operation and support, which led the New England Grocer to send one of its staff to Jamaica, there to gather on the spot, such information about the Island, its products, resources, climate, people and places, transportations, trade and commerce etc., as to best forward this great enterprise, the Jamaica International Exhibition, which was formally opened in Kingston on the 27th of last month—January, 1891. In this way the interests of Jamaica could be benefitted, in that the Exhibition, the enterprise nearest and dearest their hearts, could be aided, and the people of New England furnished with direct and reliable information, such as would enable them to intelligently prepare exhibits to send there. Furthermore, arrangements were to be made for the party of gentlemen and ladies which leaves for Jamaica via Bermuda and Nassau on February 28th, in charge of the manager of the New England Grocer, to see this beautiful tropic isle, view the Exhibition, and glance, en voyage, at the Bermudas, Bahamas and Cuba.

The Island of Jamaica is thoroughly tropical, and is situated about 90 miles south of the south coast of Cuba, the city of Kingston, Jam., being about 300 miles south of Havana. It is a heavily wooded isle, replete with all the magnificence of tropical foliage. Here is the home of the cocoanut, the beautiful palm tree, the banana, mango, lime, coffee, spices, cocoa, oranges, and other tropical fruits; and here the soft, balmy breezes, laden with spice scented odors, are wafted the year round, for there is only summer in this fair isle. The blue, warm waters of the Caribbean surround it, making the Princess of the Great Antilles, a veritable Garden of Eden scarcely less beautiful than Paradise.

The Island of Jamaica is about 150 miles long by 50 miles wide, in the centre. It was one of the first islands visited by Columbus, and being subsequently occupied by the Spanish, before it came under English rule, it is filled with curious old ruins of Spanish fortifications and churches.

Here, too, are to be seen great sugar estates, sugar mills in operation, surrounded by fields of cane, and sugar mills in ruins, the relics of the palmy days of the old Sugar Kings—long since past.

At the eastern end of the island is located the vast banana industry, whence nearly every banana coming into New England is shipped. The import trade of Jamaica is most important, and a large part of it is from the United States.

The trade of Jamaica with the United States is of great importance. All the flour consumed in the island comes from this country, and nearly all the carriages, of all kinds; and boots and shoes, etc., are imported into Jamaica from New England. In exchange for our products, we get oranges, bananas, cocoanuts, cocoa, logwood, chincona, coffee, sugar, etc.; and all the pimento (known to housekeepers as "allspice") comes from the forests of Jamaica. The people of Jamaica are nearly all black, or more or less colored. There are the maroons, the descendants of the early slaves, the more recent types of native blacks, the handsome quadroons, and last (but first), the beautiful, cultivated, graceful creoles. The creole woman is a "thing of beauty and a joy forever!"

In the streets of Kingston there are many curious sights. Everything is picturesque. We see the gaily uniformed native black troops, and the people arrayed in fantastic costumes. The city is situated at the foot of lofty hills, with the placid harbor locked by the palm-fringed Palisadoes in the foreground. Across the harbor lies the famous old West Indian stronghold, Port Royal. Perpetual summer reigns. All months of the year are much alike there, and March is much like July in our own Southern States.

While in Kingston, the party will be accorded a reception by his Excellency the Governor of Jamaica and Lady Blake; also a reception will be given by the officers on board the war ships of the British West Indian squadron, which will lie just off Port Royal. A reception will also be tendered the party on board the great white ships of the American Squadron of Evolution, which will lie off Kingston all that time.

The steamship "Halifax" has been chartered for the trip. She is a new steel, Clyde-built steamship, commanded by S. Rowland Hill. She is 17,000 tons and is the fastest and finest equipped steamer on the Atlantic coast.

The trip will consume twenty days, touching en route, at that most celebrated health resort, the Bermuda Islands. Kingston, Jamaica, will be the objective point, where the great Exhibition will be fully inspected; after which we shall sail along the coast, enjoying the beautiful coastal scenery—and on around the north side to Port Antonio, where the great banana and cocoanut plantations can be seen. We shall also call at Nassau, the capital of the Bahama Islands.

The party will sail on February 28th, 1891. A limited number of tickets will be sold—prices ranging from $90 to$115, according to state room and accommodations. This will include transportation for the round trip, meals on voyage, and lodging and meals while in port.

The sailing of this party on February 28th will be quite a day in Boston, as a large party of representative citizens and representatives of the press will be invited to accompany the party on board the "Halifax" down Boston harbor. After bidding the party bon voyage, the members of the press and other guests will return to the city on a fast steam tug. This will be an unusual event, as this will be the first excursion party which ever left Boston for the West Indies, particularly Jamaica, which is visited by comparatively few Americans.

All Others Fall Short.

None can imitate Shakespeare or Milton with success; Edison has no duplicate on earth; American push and individuality have no peer. In other words there are things in this world that cannot be successfully counterfeited. And among them must be counted Brussels soap. Though destined to work about the dirt of earth, yet there it fulfills its mission to perfection and with ease. It's economical.

National Sailors' Home.

Recently there was published in a Quincy paper a rehashed communication from a Boston paper, in which Mr. Faxon defends, as best he can, his administration of the affairs at this Home. We will deal with a few of his assertions. In it he states that the house is not unsafe on account of fire; but it seems the State Inspector of Buildings, who examined the home a short time ago, thinks quite different, for a few days ago he sent two of his men here who took measurements for two fire escapes to be placed one on each end of the building.

He admits the rooms are cold, but not so cold that water will freeze in them; but water has frozen, as the inmates know, many times in various rooms of the building in the severe cold weather of past winters. In some of the attic rooms the inmates have had to place pails to catch water that leaked through the roof in stormy weather. He also states that the health of the inmates does not appear to be affected by sleeping in cold rooms. Being a physician he ought to be quite a competent judge of the temperature that would be healthful for a person to sleep in; but how does he reconcile that point with the fact that in addition to the steam heat in his sleeping rooms he also finds it necessary to have the heat from a stove. This matter of cold rooms at the Home has been for the past twenty years of serious importance to the men that have had to sleep in them. Many of them are old, sick and feeble and do not possess the warm blood of years gone by, when they nimbly climbed the rigging or manned the guns on the war ships of Uncle Sam.

Many of the bed have but a single thin mattress to separate the person from the bed slats, and that is the reason that the men suffer with the cold, particularly when some of the mattresses contain only wood shavings, not excelsior. Now, in our opinion, there is not much inherent heat in wood shavings as a couch for anyone to sleep on in cold rooms, but nevertheless the inmates have to do so, and they know that straw, or even hay, would be a welcome substitute.

There is another subject which has for many years deeply concerned the inmates who are pensioners at this Home. It is the fast and loose manner in which they have had to pay money out of their pensions to the superintendent. This system has been in vogue since March, 1875, and to say the least it looks peculiar to the pensioners. They want to know by what authority they are forced to pay him their money when section two of the first and only printed rules ever posted in this Home, with the names of the trustees attached, distinctly states as follows:

> All beneficiaries of the Home who receive pensions will be required to have the same drawn to the order of the superintendent, who will keep an accurate account of the sums belonging to each person. No charge will be made for board, rooms, fuel, or lights, but drafts will be made upon pensioners for clothing or extra supplies of any kind, the balance may be expended by each inmate for such purposes as are approved by the trustees, or the superintendent, or it will be paid over to him whenever discharged from the Home.

These are the rules in relation to pension money, and it is not known that any pensioner that ever paid board here ever got a written discharge when leaving the Home, and that the money paid by him to Dr. Faxon for the so-called board was never returned to him.

With these facts is it any wonder that the men want to know by what right or reason they have to pay this money over to him at each drawing of the pensions? If this is a rule that the trustees agreed upon in 1875, why did they not do away with the old rules and post new ones, as a protection and guide to the men, informing them what percentage of pensions they will have to pay for board, and the limit to be charged? It is our opinion that some day, if this system of payments is not changed, the managers of this corporation may find themselves in a big and not agreeable legal snarl.

In connection with this subject comes another disagreeable point: The pensioners want to know where the superintendent gets his arbitrary and absolute power, in the absence of any rules posted to govern him in the matter, to take it upon himself to regulate the price to be charged for board. For instance, here is a sample: One inmate, who lost his good right hand with Farragut on the Hartford at the fight in Mobile bay, receives $30 per month pension and has to pay the excessive price of $22 for board, while another man, who has left here now, who received $72 per month pension was only charged $16 per month for board. One old veteran here has paid into this Home under this shady payment system $902.

How to be an Angel.

The recipe for this is largely made up of Don't. It is not always put up in packages to suit, but after a thorough trial you will find the size convenient enough.

If you want to be rated amongst the first-class angels (with or without wings), you don't want to swindle your fellow-man six days in a week and pray all day Sunday; you don't want to give a poor, hungry creature a tract; you don't want to try and save a soul with your abortive attempt when a life is in peril; you don't want to waste your sympathy or money on the far-away heathen when your charity can be placed to better advantage nearer home; you don't want to think that you are nearer the golden gate than the poor wretch whose clothes are not as fine as your own; you don't want to make the mistake that you have a better right here than any one else; you don't want to think that this terrestrial globe was created for your enjoyment; you don't want to think that this world cannot get along without you. You don't want to be a fool.—National Standard.

Spinning as a Fine Art.

A traveller gives an interesting account, in the latter part of the seventeenth century of German schools for spinning for little maids of six and over, where they were taught to make a fine thread that they could never make if the learning were delayed, the teacher sitting in the centre of the room, a long white wand in hand, with which she tapped the idlers, and as each child could spin a fine and finer thread she was raised to a higher form, spinning being the education, and all the promotions and chastisements of schools in general being observed. It was at about the same date that the laird's daughter of Barganan,—Christian Shaw,—herself commenced the spinning of fine linen thread in Dundee, selling it to the lace-makers, and so brought about what with subsequent improvements proved to be a great industry, for which good work we may forgive her for having been the cause of the burning of five witches. It was not long afterward that the wife of Fletcher of Saltoun took a journey over-seas with two experts disguised as servants, and brought back to her parish the secrets connected with the weaving of Hollands, "to the great enrichment of the inhabitants." It was a woman, too, who in 1725 brought into Scotland from Holland, where almost all such ideas seem to have been in a very forward state, the art of spinning white sewing thread, and we can picture to ourselves the need she had of it before she went a fearsome journey, and watched and waited, like a spy, among foreign people, in order to bring it into use,—a great business now, giving support to thousands, giving comfort to millions.—Harper's Bazar.

Letter from California.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 1st, 1891.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

Please send my paper to 261 Ninth St., this city.

The great Crocker monument, which I have been working on at Rocklin, is finished. It has taken thirty men one year and six months to cut it out of Rocklin Granite, and it is being now erected in the cemetery at Oakland, Cal., to the memory of the late Charles Crocker, former President of the Northern Pacific railroad. It required over seventy cars to carry the stone from there to Oakland, and when completed will be the most beautiful, as well as the largest, monument ever erected to any one individual in this State, and cost $100,000.

I am now working in the great city of San Francisco, where everything seems to be rush and hustle. A great change from the quiet little town of Rocklin to the greatest city of the golden West, where it is dangerous to cross the streets for fear of being run over by teams, and especially by the cable cars which run very fast and within a few yards of each other, up and down the main streets from the ferries to the Golden Gate Park; and other lines running at right angles up and down the steep hills, at break-neck speed, with open cars. Just as in the summer, and why not, the weather is most delightful and warm.

I had the pleasure of attending church last Sunday in the great Trinity, where the funeral services of King Kalakaua were conducted on January 22. I have noticed a great number of churches of all denominations, very beautiful in architecture and design. There are many costly buildings being erected here at the present time.

I have visited most every city and large town in Northern and Southern California and for business and costly buildings this city beats them all. It should by all means be the capital of California. Sacramento, the capital, is built on very low, swampy ground; the water is muddy and unfit to drink, and is taken from the Sacramento river. If I am any judge the capital, instead of being the prettiest is the dirtiest city in the State.

I will close with best regards to you all in Quincy.

Very respectfully,
THOMAS TALBOT.

Our Largest Bell.

The largest bell in America says E. H. Goss, in the New England Magazine, is that of Notre Dame Cathedral, Montreal, which hangs in the south tower. It is six feet high, eight feet seven inches in diameter, and weighs 24,780 pounds. It is ornamented with images of the Blessed Virgin and St. John the Baptist, together with emblems of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry. It was cast in London, and bears this inscription in Latin: "I was cast in the year of the Christian era 1847, the two hundred and second since the foundation of Montreal, the first of Pius the Ninth's pontificate, and the tenth of the reign of Victoria, Queen of England. I am the gift of the merchants, the farmers, and the mechanics of 'Ville Marie.'" In the opposite tower hangs a chime of ten bells, the smallest weighing 897 pounds, the largest 6011, total 21,696 pounds.

The largest bell in the United States is the alarm bell on City Hall, New York, which was cast by Blake, of Boston. It is six feet high, eight feet in diameter, and weighs 23,000 pounds.

Characteristics of Hands.

Hands are divided into three different kinds; those with round-pointed fingers, those with square tips, and those that are spade-shaped, with pods of flesh at each side of the nail. The first type,—with round-pointed fingers,—belong to characters with perceptions extra sensitive, to very pious people, to contemplative minds, to the impulsive, and to all poets and artists who have ideality as a prominent trait. The square-shaped belong to scientific people, sensible, self-contained characters, and to the class of professional men who are neither vissionary nor altogether sordid. The spade-shaped type, with pods of flesh at the side of the nail, indicates people whose interests and instincts are mostly material. Each finger, no matter what kind of a hand it is joined to, has a joint representing each of those types. The division or the finger that is nearest the palm stands for the body, the middle division represents mind, and the highest joint spirit or soul. If the top joint is longer than the others it denotes a character weakened with a too abundant imagination, great ideality and a leaning towards the theoretical rather than the practical. When the middle joint of the finger is long, it promises a logical mind, and when the lowest joint is longest, it indicates a nature that clings more to the luxuries than to the refinements of life. If they are nearly alike, it indicates a well-balanced mind, especially if the length of the fingers equals the length of the palm.

A City Bargain.

Mrs. Hayseed—"Hugh! Want fifteen cents for them ere hats?"

Cross Roads Storekeeper—"Can't sell 'em any cheaper, Mrs. Hayseed."

I saw them same kind 'o hats advertised in a city paper fer five cents each, and I writ to Cousin Sarah, what lives in the city, to git me one that same day before they was all gone, and she did. It arrived yesterday an' you'll see it soon as it's trimmed. Only five cents, too."

Legislative Hearing.

The Committee on Drainage of the Massachusetts Legislature gave a hearing Thursday, at the State House, Boston, on the proposed Sewerage system for the city of Quincy. All of the committee were present, and the city was represented by Mayor Fairbanks, City Solicitor Hayes, Councilmen Thompson, Newcomb, Duffield, Holden, Moxon, Morton, Bass, ex-Councilman Federhen, representatives Quincy, Burke and Bicknell of this district, ex-Commissioner Alexander, Henry H. Faxon, Henry McGrath, Dr. W. L. Faxon, Thomas J. Lamb, Joseph L. Whiton, and a PATRIOT representative, Weymouth was represented by Hon. James Humphrey and Augustus J. Richards; Engineer Blake, who made the study, was also present to answer any questions which the committee might ask.

The hearing was opened by City Solicitor Hayes, in behalf of the city who explained the proposed plan, saying that the proposed outlet at Nut island was perhaps the best, the only question was as to cost, the bill as drafted in his mind presents these questions: the appointing of commissioners, the borrowing of the money, and is it a and will it accomplish what is required, and will the Legislature authorize the city to borrow the amount of money necessary.

Feasible and Practical Plan,

In answer to questions of the committee, Mayor Fairbanks said the present indebtness of the city of Quincy was $191,000, the valuation $13,000,000. The plan covers the entire city. We do not propose to build all that is outlined in the plan, only what is needed at present. Quincy is a growing city and has a population of 17,000. Many have refused to build until a system of sewerage is adopted. He thought the $400,000 asked for would be sufficient at present, but he could not tell what the cost of the whole system as presented on the outline would be.

Councilman Newcomb said the cost of the whole city system as outlined by Mr. Blake, would when completed be $420,000, but the completion would cover ten years, and at the expiration of that time the estimated population would be $25,000. We consider Nut island the best outlet to be obtained, for the current there is at the rate of four and one-half knots per hour. In the plan a storage basin is provided for near the town farm, from which the sewage will be pumped out at low tide. It was located there because it was the lowest point, everything coming in by gravitation. We adopted this plan for the future needs of the city, to be constructed as fast as wanted.

Henry H. Faxon, had not studied the matter much, but he was convinced that the estimated cost with outlet at Nut island would be more than given. He understood that our board of health recommended it to be emptied at Quincy Point. This would not cost half as much and would answer every purpose for ten years. Anything that will benefit the city would benefit him and he had Always Urged Improvements.

There was no doubt but a sewer was wanted for the centre of the city. Some few years ago he had offered to construct a sewer in the centre which would empty into Town river to cost $6000, and had he been allowed to do so we would not have any need of a system at present. People are very much afraid of sewerage matter and there is a great deal of sentimental business about it. People who have cesspools are afraid of a little fresh air. Cleanliness is next to Godliness, and if people will have their cesspools looked after, as he did his, there would be no need of a sewerage for the next ten years. The greatest trouble is in the cost of which the people have no idea. If it is emptied at Nut island the inhabitants of Houghs Neck will struggle to defeat it.

It is the same at the Point, if you have it there, they will kick, and there will be a kick wherever it is emptied. It has got to be emptied somewhere and he did not believe it would make any difference for a number of years where it was. In answer to a question as to what he estimated the cost of the proposed plan Mr. Faxon said one million dollars; it might not at first, but they would find something would not work and the thing would be a constant bill of expense. If constructed with outlet at Quincy Point the cost would not be more than one half.

One of the committee then asked Mr. Faxon why the cost of the sewer could not be estimated as well as the Metropolitan. In reply Mr. Faxon said he did not think they had estimated very near the cost of that sewer. He did not want the city to get Into Deep Water.

There are sections they say, that will not want a sewer at present, but he would like to know where they were. He had a good many tenants and his experience was that the dirtiest tenant was always the first to find fault.

Herbert M. Federhen said Mr. Faxon does not want the city to get into deep water, which had always been his cry, for he wanted shallow water. Mr. Federhen then showed on the map where Mr. Faxon had proposed to empty his sewer all around which was flats. When he could not get that he proposed Quincy Point. An engineer was hired who experimented by floats, the result of which was very unsatisfactory.

Dr. W. L. Faxon explained the difference between the two outlets, one of which was for the city and one for those people who do not care where the sewer empties. The map on the wall was simply a compromise. This plan will be developed into the right thing. The doctor here explained by the map where he thought the cost could be eliminated. No one need deny that the city wants a sewer and the only question is in regard to cost.

This plan was one on which more than a majority of the people had settled. For the twenty miles outlined he thought the $400,000 would build it, and that the people of Quincy would support it.

Hon. James Humphrey said he appeared there at the request of the Selectmen of Weymouth to say

Weymouth Would Not Oppose

the proposed outlet at Nut Island, but would object to an outlet at Quincy Point.

Councilman Duffield remonstrated against the sewer emptying at Quincy Point. He hoped the committee would investigate the system of irrigation.

Engineer Blake here arrived and said when he made the study for the city of Quincy he was fully aware of all the proposed systems for the city and he could not condemn too severely any plan that would empty the sewage at Quincy Point. He knew of no town in the State in which the plan of irrigation could be practiced. This plan provides for the collecting of the sewage by drains which is carried to a central point and passed out at a place where the current is three or four times that of Moon island.

Question: Could not the gravity system be carried out at Quincy? Answer: No, there is no proper application except by pumping.

Q. What height do you propose to pump this sewage? A. From twenty-five to thirty feet would be sufficient to force the flow.

Councilman Duffield, asked why the system in Worcester could not be adopted in Quincy.

Answer. In the first place the cost would be indefinitely larger, and it is a system that would not be applied where any other system was applicable.

Question. Can the discharge pipe from the pumping station to Nut island be used by people who live on the line?

Answer. On high land yes, on low land no, all estates ten feet above the pipe can use it.

Henry H. Faxon asked if it would not be an objection to having the pumping station located at the Town farm as it was so near the centre. Answer. Did not think it would where sewage was taken care and disposed of in twenty-four hours. Public sentiment is not always based on common sense.

$250,000 Would Cover the Expense of the sewer for the present. Mr. Blake supposed the reason $400,000, was asked was to save future legislation.

Mr. B. F. Thomas of the Board of Health said he had investigated the system at Worcester, and could not see why that plan could not be applied to Quincy.

Mr. Blake: Worcester was situated above the level and Quincy was not.

Mr. H. H. Faxon wanted to know how the proposed sewer could go through a swamp of his, where he had never been able to find the bottom. This question was answered satisfactorily by Mr. Blake.

Councilman said he understood Worcester got a return from their system, and if the city of Quincy could get a return, would it not be well to have the same here.

Mr. Blake said he had prepared plans for that form of drainage, but did not think it possible to have a system of that kind in Quincy; and did not think a plan could be constructed where the irrigation system was used that could be made to pay anything back when all expenses are considered.

Josiah Quincy, Jr.:—We have been waiting for a system in Quincy for a number of years; it was one of the problems that was postponed until we became a city. He believed it a pressing necessity that Quincy should have a system of sewerage; he agreed with the Mayor, that no sewerage system was a detriment to people building there, and while this is an expense to our city it is a necessary one. He believed the plan presented was satisfactory, and one that should be adopted. The city should be given the money they need to carry out the plan, and should urge the loan authorized. The city should have the money before they make any contracts, and before they start they should have ample resources to complete the whole city.

The hearing ended at 1 o'clock.

Sunday's Herald says: T. H. Bartlett, the sculptor, has returned from his stay of more than two years in Paris and has taken a studio in Quincy. His friends will miss his picturesque great den at the end of the wharf on Federal street, which was the scene of various Bohemian gatherings that will probably some day have a notable place in the artistic and literary history of Boston. Mr. Bartlett, who is one of the best American writers on artistic subjects, is contributing to the American Architect a series of articles on Fremiet, the great French sculptor.

A very pretty party of about fifty couples passed an enjoyable evening in Faxon hall, Monday night. It was the first of the Alpha assemblies, which will be confined to married people, or "those old enough to be." It will be noticed that there is a sprinkling of old bachelors in the list below, but the others are in hopes to show these the error of their way, and convince them that only real enjoyment can be found among the married. The success of the party is due to Mrs. James H. Stetson, under whose management they are held. Delightful music was furnished by Monk.

The DAILY LEDGER and Quincy PATRIOT can hereafter be obtained from E. Stocker, the new news agent at Atlantic.

From a lengthy Atlantic petition it would appear that Atlantic was practically unanimous for the extension of Quincy free postal delivery system to that ward. The people will of course want a postal station, which will give them as good accommodations as now, while the benefits of free delivery will be in addition. No wonder they want the improvement.

Mrs. McClintock's annual report at the Temperance meeting on Tuesday evening was a model of its kind, and reflected much credit on the "Union's" secretary.

The Wollaston Y. W. C. T. U. held its regular meeting last Saturday evening with Miss Rosetta Key. The attendance was large despite the inclemency of the weather and the interest which is being manifested in the work by the young people cannot fail to result in much good.

The next meeting will take place on Saturday evening, February 21, at the home of Miss Bessie C. Jones, at 7.30 o'clock.

On Sunday evening the Rev. Luther Freeman preached a special sermon to the Y's, and a cordial invitation was extended to the Woman's Christian Temperence Union and the King's Daughters. Many were prevented from attending on account of the unfavorable weather, but those who were present gained pleasure and profit, and it is a matter of regret that all the young women of Wollaston could not have been present.

As a result of the sermon several new names were added to the membership roll of the Y's by young people who had hitherto manifested no interest in the work.

Mr. Kates has commenced the erection of a dwelling on the Wollaston Park land.

Mr. John S. Burns has commenced the erection of a dwelling-house on West Elm avenue, Wollaston.

Warren Avenue Railroad Bridge.

It is hoped by the citizens of Wollaston, that the City Council will act favorably on the petition presented by Councilman Sherman for Geo. E. Thomas and others, for the building of a bridge over the railroad track at the end of Warren avenue. This bridge is a public necessity. For years the residents of the east side living any distance from Beale street have been compelled, when desiring to cross to the west side, to climb a four rail fence, slide down a steep banking, tumble into a ditch, cross a railroad track, jump another ditch crawl up a slimy banking, and climb over another high fence before reaching Newport avenue.

Some kind of a bridge is needed to connect the two sections of this avenue, which are divided by the Old Colony's tracks. It is hoped that when the committee's report is made to the Council that the "leave to withdraw" will not be accepted and that the Council will afford relief to the petitioners by constructing a foot-bridge. One could be built for about $500.

Supper and Entertainment.

The vestry of the Wollaston Congregational church was crowded on Thursday evening with members of the society and their friends, the occasion being the regular monthly sociable.

District School.

The greatest hit of the many good entertainments given in the Universalist vestry was that of Wednesday evening, "The District School." Never before was the commodious vestry so crowded. Miss F. S. Davis, a teacher in one of our public schools, was Miss Scroggins, the teacher of the district school, and she had as her pupils some model children, whose actual ages were from ten to seventy years.

Morning Session.

The big bell was rung and as the scholars entered they each "made their manners" and in turn presented the teacher with flowers, vegetables, ketchup, and other tokens.

There was a roll call and the reasons that some of the pupils gave for the absence of others were very amusing.

After the singing the classes were called out, and wrestled with scissors, Constantinople, zebra, physician, sneeze, cough, enterprise, nuisance, bluff, strike, etc., giving examples of each. It was a bright scholar who when asked to give an example of "enterprise" said, the DAILY LEDGER.

The grammar and geography classes were equally amusing. Seth Crane was a particularly troublesome boy, but the teacher's rather enjoyed his antics. The A. B. C. class was dismissed first, and then the older one's and the morning session was over.

The Afternoon Session.

The School Committees were expected in the afternoon and the teacher gave the pupils a lecture on good behavior before their arrival. The august board was received by the school standing, salutes (and spit balls), and sang one of their pretty little songs.

A special programme had been prepared, singing, declamations, compositions, reading, etc., which so edified the School Committee, Messrs. Keating, Tilton and North, that they then and there discharged the teacher.

The Committee departed and then there was crying over the dismissal of the teacher, the scene being a very affectionate one.

Miss Lucy W. Brown of Quincy Point is confined to the house by illness. Miss Brown has lately passed the examination of the Bridgewater Normal school, and intended to go last Wednesday but was taken ill. She will join her class as soon as she is able.

Eighty Years of Age.

Mrs. Abigail W. Slade, of Quincy Point, observed the eightieth anniversary of her birth by entertaining her host of old friends at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. John Shaw, wife of ex-Councilman Shaw, one of Quincy's most energetic and public spirited citizens, on Hill street Wednesday evening.

Mrs. Slade has four children living, all of whom were present: Mrs. John Shaw, ex-Councilman Slade, Walter W. Slade, of Boston and Mrs. Charles H. Wise, of Boston.

Of her thirteen grandchildren, ten were present, as Mr. Fred Slade and Miss Florence were in the West and Miss Helen is at Vassar College. Her husband, the late James Slade, City engineer of Boston for several years, died in 1884.

The house was handsomely decorated in honor of the event, and the grounds and buildings beautifully illuminated.

Mrs. Slade received her friends from four to ten P. M., and of the 200 invitations issued they were responded to by society people from Boston, Rockland, Providence and many other distant places, who were only too glad to tender their congratulations. They all remarked on the fine appearance, bright and even youthful manner of the hostess as she greeted her old friends.

Mrs. Slade received many beautiful presents, including eighty roses, and the occasion was a happy one.

Mr. and Mrs. John Lincoln are visiting at Fall River.

Mr. Perley Runnells, who has been in California, has returned home.

One of John Cashman's horses, attached to a stone drag, had the misfortune to burst a blood vessel Tuesday.

If these pleasant days continue about a week, the roof of the new Willard schoolhouse will be closed in and then work will progress much more rapidly and satisfactorily.

Mr. F. J. Fuller is the owner of a quarry at Pomenah, N. H., and wishing more money to work it with, a stock company is being formed known as the Pomenah Granite Co. Mr. J. J. Barry, is soliciting subscription to stock at West Quincy, and is meeting with good success.

The National Bank project for West Quincy is assuming more definite shape, and is being discussed with vigor by the business men. The plan talked of is to erect a brick block in which the bank would be located.

West Quincy is soon to have a block of which she can be proud, Mr. Sidney J. Smith is the man who is to build it. The old stores on the corner of Copeland and Cross streets occupied by Coram's news-stand and the bakery are to be moved back and a large three-story building of brick and wood will be erected on that site. The building will have a frontage of fifty-four feet on Copeland street and thirty-six feet on Cross street. On the street floor there will be three stores with a tenement overhead. T. L. Williams the jeweler has engaged the corner store, which will be much larger than his present room. Mr. Williams says he will have it handsomely fitted up and it will be second to none outside of Boston. Operations will be commenced April 1, and Mr. Smith intends that the contractor shall bind himself to have it completed in a specified time, or pay a forfeit of $10 per day. It can be truly said that West Quincy does move.

Epworth League Entertainment.

The Epworth League connected with the West Quincy Methodist church gave a very interesting entertainment Wednesday evening at the church before a large audience. The first number on the programme was a selection by the Automatic Quintette, composed of Messrs. Charles Badger, John Higman, Edward Miller, Fred Badger and Albert Lowe.

Mrs. Burrell the elocutionist of Quincy Centre, followed with one of her pleasing selections, and Miss Lizzie Smith delighted the audience with a fine banjo solo.

A quartette composed of Misses Flora and Louise Shackley, Mr. William Parsons and Mr. Fred Badger, came next, and Mr. Charles Barion gave a harmonica solo which was well rendered. Mr. John Higman and Mr. Charles Badger sang a duett, which was followed by another reading by Mrs. Burrell. The next number was a selection by a ladies' quartette, composed of Misses Addie and Annie Miller, Louise Shackley and Abbie Fuller, which was excellent, Miss Abbie Fuller sang a solo, and the entertainment closed with a farmer's song by four gentlemen and four ladies.

The entire programme was well rendered and it is needless to say that each number received an encore. The grand finale was by the audience who partook of ice cream and cake.

WHY ROYAL
Baking Powder is Best

"The Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure, for I have so found it in many tests made both for that company and the United States Government.

"I will go still further and state that, because of the facilities that that company have for obtaining perfectly pure cream of tartar, and for other reasons dependent upon the proper proportions of the same, and the method of its preparation,

"the Royal Baking Powder is undoubtedly the Purest and most reliable baking powder offered to the public.

Town River.

Congressman Morse secured by an act of Congress at the last session, a preliminary examination of Town River in Quincy with a view to its improvement.

He succeeded in securing a favorable report from Col. S. M. Mansfield, Lieut. Col. of Engineers, who recommends an appropriation of $20,000 by the next Congress, for the improvement of Town River, and Col. Mansfield's recommendation is endorsed by the Secretary of War and transmitted to Congress.

It remains to be seen if Congressman Morse can get the appropriation through the next Democratic House of Representatives. The people of Quincy can be sure he will try.

Col. Mansfield's reports are as follows:

Preliminary Examination.

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE,
Boston, Mass., November 1, 1890.

GENERAL: In compliance with instructions contained in letter from your office dated September 20, 1890, I have the honor to submit the following report of a preliminary examination of Town River, Massachusetts, provided for in the river and harbor act approved September 19, 1890.

Town River is a small tidal river debouching into Weymouth Fore River, and lies entirely within the limits of the city of Quincy. It is about 1½ miles long from its mouth at Quincy Point to the upper wharves of the city, where lumber and granite are handled, and where large amounts of coal and heavy merchandise would be transferred were the facilities for navigating the river improved.

The upper half of the river (three-fourths of a mile) has a very narrow and crooked channel, carrying about 1½ feet of water at low tide, and this is the region demanding improvement to the extent of securing 4 feet of water through a channel 200 feet wide. With this accomplished, valuable wharf privileges will be given the city of Quincy in addition to those already established, for the channel will run near to one bank of the river.

During the past year about 300 cargoes of granite (30,000 to 40,000 tons) have been shipped, and over 40 cargoes of lumber landed, measuring 2,500,000 feet and three cargoes of brick. About 35,000 tons of coal for Quincy were landed at the wharves at the mouth of the river (Quincy Point,) a large portion of which would be delivered near the center of the city, and about 2 miles of teaming would be saved with an improved river.

I think the river worthy of improvement, and recommend an allotment of $450 for a survey upon which to base a plan and estimate for the work.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
S. M. MANSFIELD,
Lieut. Col. of Engineers.
Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

The Engineer's Survey.

UNITED STATES ENGINEERS OFFICE,
Boston, Mass., December 31, 1890.

GENERAL: I have the honor to forward herewith a report of Mr. Sophus Haagensen, Assistant Engineer, on the survey of Town River, Massachusetts, made in accordance with Department instructions of November 4, 1890, and to comply with the provisions of the river and harbor act of September 19, 1890.

A tracing of the survey is also submitted.

The report of the preliminary examination is dated November 1, 1890, and I respectfully invite attention to it for a general description of the river, for its commercial importance, and the reasons for making the survey.

The survey shows that the natural channel of the river is sufficiently capacious to accommodate its present and prospective commerce to a point within 4,500 feet of the head of navigation.

From this point I respectfully recommend that the channel be improved by dredging, so that it shall be 100 feet wide, 4 feet deep at mean low water, as indicated on the accompanying chart.

The cost of this improvement is estimated as follows:

Dredging 80,000 cubic yards, at 23 cents,	$18,400
Contingencies,	1,600
Total,	$20,000

I respectfully invite attention to the accompanying report of Mr. Sophus Haagensen, assistant engineer, for the details of the survey and a general description of the river and its approaches.

Town river, Massachusetts, is in the collection district of Boston, Mass., of which Boston is the port of entry; the nearest light-house is on Long Island, Boston harbor, Massachusetts.

Very respectfully your obedient servant,
S. M. MANSFIELD,
Lieut. Col. of Engineers.
Brig. Gen. THOMAS L. CASEY,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

The Mutual Life of New York.

The annual statement of this excellent insurance company will be found in our advertising columns today. It is one of the best and most reliable in the United States, and for this reason it is gratifying to know that over $600,000 are insured on the lives of citizens of this city through the agency of Messrs. Field & Ewell. Not only the rich but the poor have taken polices, feeling it to be the safest place that could be found to put a dollar for the protection of their wives and families. Some of our rich citizens have as high as fifty or sixty thousand dollars insurance in the Mutual Life Insurance Company of New York.

The annual statement shows the remarkable progress made by this institution during twelve months. The record made by the Mutual eclipses its own best efforts, and naturally exceeds that of any other financial institution in the world. The new business written amounted to $160,985,986, showing a continuous and phenomenal advance. The assets of the Mutual Life now aggregate $147,154,961.20, indicating a gain for the year of $10,753,633.18. The company has now an outstanding insurance account amounting to $638,226,865. Its total income from all sources is reported at $34,978,778.69. It paid to its members during the year for death claims and endowments and other obligations $16,973,200.05. Up to date the Mutual had 206,055 policies in force, showing a gain in membership for the year of 23,745, thus forming the biggest army of policy-holders in any regular life insurance company in the world. The surplus fund is now $,981,233.38 over and above every liability.

Spelling at Church Sociables.

The Sunday School connected with the First Congregational church, held a very enjoyable social in the chapel Thursday evening. Messrs. A. C. Sampson and E. S. Sampson had charge of the programme which was as follows:—Games, potato match; blind walking; donkey party; Boston; dumb orchestra; piano duett, Miss Gray and Miss Bailey; declamation, Mr. Vare King; song with guitar accompaniment, Miss Burns; charades, Messrs. Sampson. An old-fashioned spelling match concluded the entertainment, the sides were chosen by Messrs. E. C. Sampson and Vare King, the following young ladies and gentlemen taking part:—Miss Robinson, Miss Gray, Miss Pollock, Miss Burroughs, Miss Gardner, Miss Hitchcock, Miss Merrill, Miss Bailey, Misses Webb, Miss Perry, Miss Mitchell, Miss Drake, Miss Elliot, Miss Taylor, Miss Hayward, Miss Bills, Miss Sargent, Mr. King, Mr. Sampson, Mr. Brown, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Bailey, Mr. W. Bills, Mr. Ryder, Mr. W. Tanner, Mr. C. Tanner, Mr. Merrill, Mr. Darling, Mr. D. Bills. Mr. Sampson's side winning.

Auditor Ladd says that the State tax this year will be only $1,500,000 or $250,000 less than it was last year.

Yacht Club Annual.

A large and enthusiastic annual meeting of the Quincy Yacht Club was held at City hall last Saturday evening, Feb. 7. Commodore Shaw in the chair.

The election of officers for ensuing year resulted as follows:

Commodore,—John Shaw.
Vice Commodore,—John W. Sanborn.
Secretary and Treasurer,—H. M. Faxon.
Measurer,—C. F. Colby.

Regatta Committee,—H. L. Rice, W. H. Shaw, Dr. E. E. Davis, Geo. E. Pfaffman, and Commodore Shaw, ex-officio.

House Committee,—James H. Slade, John S. Murray, W. Henry Dean, J. H. Slade, Jr., and Commodore, Vice Commodore, and Secretary, ex-officiis.

The club adopted Corinthian Sailing Rules, the amendment reading "The wheel or tiller of each yacht shall be held only by amateur members of the club throughout the race, and none but amateurs shall be allowed on board any yacht when competing for prizes, except that one paid man shall be allowed to sail provided he is regularly employed on the boat. An amateur for the purpose of this rule, shall be defined to be one who has never received money or equivalent compensation for sailing, or assisting to sail a boat since this club was organized."

Commodore Shaw presented a communication from Commodore Soley of the Massachusetts Yacht Club, extending an invitation to the members of the Quincy Club to attend the Friday evening meetings of the Massachusetts Club at their winter quarters, 99 Boylston street, Boston. The invitation was accepted and a vote of thanks was returned to Commodore Soley.

Ex-Councilman Herbert M. Federhen, who was the leader of the movement which formed the Quincy Yacht Club in 1874, and Mr. George T. Bigelow, the first secretary of the club, were made honorary members.

The meeting adjourned to Saturday, March 14.

Mad Dog Killed.

Shortly before 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon the spaniel dog which attacked City Messenger Tirrell and Mr. Napoleon Nadeau on Tuesday evening started in to finish up the job in the Square. He caught Mr. A. G. Olney by the coat, then passed on to Miss Marion Nickerson, whom he bit through her glove. His course lay through Hancock, School, Franklin and Water streets to Garfield street. On his way he tackled Mr. Joseph Marcella, a daughter of Nicholas Garbarino and others, also dogs belonging to Mitchell Willis, Alonzo Litchfield, Craig & Richards and others.

Miss Nickerson who is a resident of Wollaston, went immediately to the office of Dr. Welch. She fortunately was more scared than hurt, and the scratches she received are not considered at all dangerous. Neither were any of the other cases.

Mayor Fairbanks who happened to be at City Hall, promptly issued orders to Deputy Langley to pursue and kill the dog and ordered all other dogs bitten to be chained.

Charles H. Penniman and William Grady had however pursued the canine in a carriage, and overtaking him on Garfield street, killed him.

Deputy Langley carried out the orders from the Mayor, and the dogs alleged to have been bitten are chained today. He also took charge of the body of the dog.

Y. M. C. A. Notes.

Mr. O. E. Ryther, General Secretary, and six members of the Hyde Park Young Men's Christian Association were present at the Young Men's meeting at Grand Army hall, Sunday afternoon. Notwithstanding the stormy weather a goodly number attended, and Mr. Ryther gave a very interesting talk.

The Y. M. C. A. Committee held an important meeting last Wednesday evening at the office of the chairman. Messrs. D. C. Hale and F. E. Quimby of Wollaston, and Alexander Clarke of South Quincy were elected members of the committee. Information concerning the work of the Y. M. C. A. committee will be furnished upon application to R. S. Elliot, secretary, 29 Granite street, Quincy.

Next Sunday afternoon Mr. R. M. Armstrong, state secretary of the Young Men's Christian Associotion of Massachusetts and Rhode Island, will be present. Mr. Armstrong will speak upon "The work of the Young Men's Christian Association." Pastors of churches, business men and young men, are cordially invited to be present.

Amateur Theatricals.

The regular entertainment in the Social club course was held in the chapel last week Friday evening, and was largely attended. The one-act comedy "Picking up the Pieces" was first presented, the parts being taken by Mr. and Mrs. Walter E. Simmons, of Wollaston, and well taken they were too. Mr. Simmons portrayed the part of an indolent English gentleman to perfection, while Mrs. Simmons, was an active, energetic womanly woman.

The bright comedy by John Broughan, entitled "Flies in the Web," was the feature of the entertainment.

MILTON.

Miss Mabel A. Harper is spending a few weeks with her sister in Northampton, Mass.

At the special town meeting, Thursday evening, the citizens voted to accept the act of the Legislature authorizing towns and cities to lay out public parks within their limits. The action of the adoption of the Australian ballot law was indefinitely postponed.

The annual reunion of the High School Association on the evening of Feb. 20 is anxiously looked forward to and will as usual be the event of the winter.

One of the most pleasant surprise parties of the season was tendered Mrs. William Robertson at her residence on Washington street, last week Friday evening. The guests, some sixty in number, arrived shortly after 8 o'clock, and before she had hardly time to recover from her surprise, Mr. Frank Kemp stepped forward and in his usual felicitous manner presented her in behalf of the company, with a very handsome silver tea service. It was some moments before Mrs. Robertson could find words to thank her friends for their beautiful gift which was so unexpected, and she assured the company that it would always be greatly prized by her, coming as it did from her neighbors and friends. Games and dancing was then in order until 4 A. M. A bountiful collation was served at midnight.

The citizens of East Milton, who are interested in school matters which are to come before the town at the coming March meeting, held a meeting at Washington hall Friday evening.

Miss Emma Zeigler will entertain a whist party at the residence of Mrs. Charles D. Clapp on Adams street, next Monday evening.

Mrs. W. H. B. Root held an "at home" at her residence Friday evening of last week, which was largely attended and a pleasant evening enjoyed.

Mr. George A. Tisdale of the enterprising firm of Kemp & Tisdale, has gone to Fitchburg for a few days' visit.

A number of the friends of Mr. James Reed gave him a surprise party at his residence on Adams street last Monday evening, when he was presented with a French clock.

Mr. John Mullen celebrated his twenty-first birthday Tuesday evening, by a gathering of a number of his young friends at his residence on Church street. A good time was enjoyed.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 11, 1891.

A great many matters affecting corporations have been presented to the legislature thus far, and it is very easy to see why the corporation influence is in favor of the biennial system. For instance, there were presented on Friday, measures looking to the revokation of licenses, to use the public streets, to enlarge the power of the commissioner of foreign mortgage corporations, to tax all corporations which use the public streets for poles, wires, and pipes, to tax corporations in different cities and towns according to the amount of business done in them respectively, to allow national banks to reorganize as state banks or trust companies, to compel the sale of new street railway stock at public auction, to limit the land which a corporation may hold exempt from taxation, to protect the interests of unworthy stockholders, and so on. Corporations enter into the popular life very closely, and there seems to be more agitation about them this year than usual.

The appropriation this year to sustain the system of prison industries, is $261,500 and that for just the salaries and expenses at the Charlestown, Concord and Sherborn prisons is $403,200. Yet that is but a small part of what the criminal class in the state cost the taxpayers, and the expenses of these large institutions are constantly increasing.

The constitutional amendment for biennial state elections, and to abolish the poll tax as a suffrage qualification, were reported to the Senate on Monday. Biennials were brought in first, and thus stand first in order to be disposed of. But the senators were not ready to take up the two matters in their natural place in the calendar for Tuesday. So they were postponed for just a week,—biennials to be put first and the poll tax second in the calendar for that day.

Signs point to more of a contest over them than had at first been expected for the senate, as a majority vote only will be sufficient there, whereas a two-thirds vote is necessary in the house. Some democratic senators who voted for the biennial amendment last year have either changed front entirely, or are in doubt. The pressure from the labor organizations is increasing and I have no doubt that some of the senators have been told that it will be bad for their political ambition to vote for the amendment. On the other hand, a similar pressure is doubtless put upon some Republicans to vote for it. The vote will not be in party lines exactly, though in the main the Republicans are for it, and the Democrats are opposed.

Theodore C. Bates of Worcester, is credited with being the moving spirit this year for biennials, and a canvass of the House which is being made, is said by members to be inspired by him. Mr. Quincy, of Quincy, the leader of the Democratic side, will carry a few Democrats with him. But some Republicans will vote against it. It looks more probable than ever that a combination is afoot to carry biennials and the poll tax through together, or to kill them both.

The free pass question has its puzzling side for the members of the legislature. The joint judiciary committee has reported that it would be unconstitutional for the State to furnish mileage to members more than once during the session to and from their homes. So the first thing to do, if the State is to compel the railroads to convey members free, is to amend the constitution by striking out this provision. The amendment has been reported and has been made a special assignment for next Monday in the Senate.

The oleo bill is expected to have a smooth passage this year. Just about the same bill as last year has been reported, and debate on it has been postponed by the Senate to Feb. 18. The hope of the oleo manufacturers is the decision in the original package case, and the farmers say they do not care for that, as their game is the retailers who defraud their customers.

The Governor and council have decided that their investigation of the charges by Mayor Matthews of Boston, against Police Commissioner Osborne shall begin next Tuesday and that it shall be published.

They have called upon the Mayor to fill specifications of his charges and have given power to send for persons and proper aid and to have all the testimony taken by a stenographer. This means that the Mayor must put his case into black and white. As politics is regarded as factor in the investigation, the case will have exceptional public interest. Ex-Gov. Robinson has been engaged as council for the comissioner, and the Mayor has retained Louis F. Dobney, of Boston, who is one of the keenest men in the State, in a cross-examination and has a wide reputation for his skill.

Probably most persons will smile to hear that a Mr. T. F. Martin has petitioned for damages for the use of the Australian ballot by the State. He asserts in his petition that he is "author and designer" of the system which has been used by the State on its official ballot, at the last two State elections, and that he has a copyright for it under United States laws. He wants damages for the alleged infringement of his copyright.

Representative Quincy offered an order in the House this week, as to the appointment of a special commission to consider the advisability of legislation to provide for a common administration by the city of Boston, and any or all of the cities and towns lying in whole or in part within a radius of twelve miles from the Boston City Hall; of matters pertaining to water supply, sewerage, highways, lighting, passenger transportation, public schools, libraries and parks, police and health departments, public institutions and other matters of common interest to such cities and towns. The order was referred to the Committee on Cities. RULE.

Free Delivery.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, U. S.,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 12, 1891.

To the Editors of the Patriot:

Dear Sisr: I have recently filed with the Post Office Department large petitions praying for the extension of free delivery service of Quincy to Wollaston and Atlantice.

It seems that the appropriation for extending the carrier service for this year is exhausted, and that will involve some delay. If you will kindly print the letter below it will explain this matter to the residents of those places.

Very truly,
ELIJAH A. MORSE.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF 1ST ASST. POSTMASTER GENERAL
SUPT. OF FREE DELIVERY.
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 11, 1891.

HON. ELIJAH A. MORSE, M. C., House of Representatives:—

Sir: Yours of the 9th, enclosing petition for the extension of the free delivery service at Quincy to Wollaston, has been received, and I have the honor to inform you that, as this petition seems to cover a request for the carrier service as well as for a station, its consideration will have to be postponed until the next appropriation is available.

Very respectfully,
S. A. WHITFIELD,
First Asst. Postmaster-General.

Eight Hours a Day.

There will be a hearing at the State House, on Wednesday next, at 10.30 A. M., by the Committee on Labor, to parties interested in the expediency of making eight hours a legal day's work for all State, County, City and Town employes.

Also, at the same time and place, on the order to consider the expediency of an act making eight hours constitute a day's work; and that said act shall be submitted to the people at the next annual State election.

—Nearly $181,000 has already been contributed to the John Boyle O'Reilly Memorial Fund.

CITY COUNCIL.

A special session of the City Council was held Monday evening, mainly to draw jurors. Seventeen members were present, the absentees being Councilmen Holden, Little and Powers.

Upon motion Councilman Bass drew the following names for jurors: Joseph S. Whall, Elmer I. Baker and Aubrey R. Keith.

The result of the vote at the recent special election, already published in the LEDGER, was reported by the Committee on Elections, and Roger H. Wilde was declared elected Councilman-at-large, and Louis Rinn a Councilman from Ward Six.

The Council then adjourned.

The Ledger Contest.

During the past week 5,637 votes have been cast in the DAILY LEDGER popularity contest, of which number the leaders have received as follows:—Mr. Bowditch 1445; Mr. Foy 1434; Miss McGovern 1311; Mr. Caldwell 456; Mr. Morris 256; Miss Leary 243; Mr. Purdy 189; Mr. Walsh 112.

The position of the first five is relatively the same as a week ago; Mr. Bowditch however has been in second place two days this week. Miss McPhail who had 1155 votes, has withdrawn.

The ultimate ending is still problematical and if rumors count for anything the first five are in the race to win.

To make things a little more interesting in the popularity contest, the publishers have offerd additional prizes.

The first prize will be the gold watch valued at over $50.

The second prize the easy chair valued at over $25.

The third, fourth and fifth prizes will each be the DAILY LEDGER for one year free of charge.

The sixth, seventh and eighth prizes will each be the DAILY LEDGER for six months.

All above the line in the list below are prize winners if not displaced.

W. C. T. U. Reunion.

The annual reunion of the Wollaston W. C. T. U. was held in the Baptist church on Tuesday evening. At six o'clock the reception committee consisting of Mrs. John N. Emerson, Mrs. Ira B. Quimby, Miss Merrill, Mrs. L. C. Ela, Mrs. A. W. Sprague, Mrs. W. W. Rice, Mrs. McKay and Mrs. Melville M. Manning, received the guests for a half an hour in the ladies' parlor of the new chapel. Notwithstanding the poor walking, a large party of ladies and gentlemen were present and passed a very pleasant half hour in conversation, after which the company adjourned to the chapel where a spread had been prepared by the members of the union. After the supper Mrs. George A. Litchfield, the local president of the W. C. T. U., called the company to order. Short addresses were made by Rev. Preston Gurney, Rev. W. S. Keys and Rev. Luther Freeman. Mrs. John N. Emerson sang by request—"The battle hymn of the Republic."

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. Charles R. Sherman, shows that the receipts the past year have been $128.97 and the expenditures $117.33 leaving a balance in the treasury of $11.64.

At the conclusion of the speaking, the company adjourned to the church where Mrs. Susan E. Fessenden delivered an interesting address on "Temperance." Mrs. Fessenden is a remarkably eloquent speaker and held the attention of the audience for upwards of an hour.

SUPPLIES FOR THE ARMY. The contract for supplying baking powder to the U. S. Army, bids for which were recently opened in New York, has been awarded to the Cleveland Baking Powder Co. Before the award was made the different baking powders offered were submitted to a thorough analysis, with the sanction of Commissary General DuBary, so that the result is a high tribute to the merit of the Cleveland Baking Powder.

Valuable Acquisition.

Through the liberality of the Wollaston Women's Christian Temperance Union, Mrs. John N. Emerson the superintendent of the Faxon Loyal Legion, has been able to purchase for the use of the Legion one of Yaggy's anatomical charts, showing the skeleton, muscles, arteries, veins and nerves, also four life-sized manikins of the body, the head, the eye and the ear. The whole was constructed under the supervision of Dr. Henry M. Lyman, Dr. Christian Fenger and Dr. W. F. Smith. In addition, there are plates illustrating blood formations, its purification and circulation and the effects of alcohol and narcotics on the human system.

The chart, with its accompanying text books, will prove a valuable acquisition to the Legion, which holds its meetings in the vestry of the Congregational church once a fortnight, and has an average attendance of sixty members.

NORTH ADAMS, with a population of 16,074, and the largest town in the State, has aspirations to be a city. Business men of the town at a meeting Monday appointed a committee to draft a city charter to be reported in two weeks. If such a document can be drawn up in that short space of time North Adams people are smart. With North Adams a city, Brookline in this county will be the largest town.

SATURDAY, FEB. 14, 1891.

A Recipe for the Day.

Take a little dash of water cold,
And a little leaven of prayer.
And a little bit of morning gold,
Dissolved in the morning air.

Add to your meal some merriment,
And a thought for kith and kin,
And then, as your prime ingrediant,
A plenty of work thrown in.

But spice it all with the essence of love
And a little whiff of play.
Let a wise old book and a glance above
Complete the well-made day.

—Woman's Journal.

Household Receipts.

RAISED DOUGHNUTS. Add to one pint of raised dough, one egg, one cup of sugar and a small piece of butter. Beat thoroughly. Let it rise, cut into shapes and fry.

MOCK FRIED APPLE PIES. Take a little raised dough, rub in a little lard, and roll thin, then fry in hot lard. Spread with sour apple or boiled cider sauce, season the sauce with nutmeg and sugar.

FLOUR GRIDDLE CAKES. Mix with one quart flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder and one teaspoonful salt. Then add one tablespoonful melted butter, two well beaten eggs and milk enough to make a batter of proper consistency. Cook immediately.

GRAHAM GRIDDLE CAKES. These griddle cakes are especially nice. Mix together dry, two cups graham flour, one cup wheat flour, two teaspoonfuls baking powder, and one teaspoonful salt. Then add three eggs well beaten, one tablespoonful lard and three cups sweet milk. Cook immediately.

APPLE TAPIOCA PUDDING. Apple tapioca pudding is always better for being baked several hours before it is used. The previous night half a cupful of tapioca was soaked in three cupfuls of cold water. In the morning the tapioca and the water in which it was soaked were put in the double boiler on the fire, the tapioca to be cooked for one hour. At the end of this time there were stirred into it half a teaspoonful of salt, half a cupful of sugar, one tablespoonful of lemon juice, and a heaping quart of pared, quartered and cored tart apples.

CORN CROQUETTES. These may be prepared at this season of the year with canned corn. Proceed as follows: Melt two tablespoonfuls of butter, stir well in half a teacupful of flour cook a few moments over a slow fire, add a little milk and one yolk of egg. This should form a good heavy sauce. Half a can of corn may now be put in and stirred well. Sweeten with powdered sugar; cover the pan and allow it to cook slowly for ten minutes; then remove from the fire, and when cold divide in small portions and shape with a knife blade, dip in beaten egg and milk, roll in bread crumbs and fry in plenty of hot lard.

MASHED POTATOES WITH EGG. Before removing mashed potatoes from the stove, beat the white of an egg with a pinch of salt until very light. After the potatoes are taken up into the dish, smooth them over, and spread the beaten egg on them, just as you would frosting on a cake, and hold a very hot inverted stove lid over them for a few seconds, or until the egg turns just the least bit yellow.

Half a teaspoonful of sugar will nearly always revive a dying fire, and, unlike the few drops of oil which servants are so fond of using, and which has caused so many sad accidents, is perfectly safe.

KITCHEN. "Kitchen" in the Scotch use of the word, means anything eaten with an article of food to give it a relish, such as butter with bread, or milk with potatoes, or cheese with crackers.

A Scotchman once asked a poor Irish neighbor what food he gave to his children.

"Potatoes," answered Pat.

"Ay; but what kitchens the potatoes?" said the Scot.

"Och!" replied the Irishman, when the meaning of the word was made clear, "they make the little praties kitchen the big ones."—Youth's Companion.

Charles S. Forbes of St. Albans, and R. J. Humphrey of Poultney, Vt., have visited Plymouth to arrange for an excursion to that town July 10th, of the Vermont Press Association. The party which will number about 150 ladies and gentlemen, including the Governor and many prominent citizens of the state, as well as the newspaper men, is to remain two days.—Old Colony Memorial.

A penny seems a little thing, but it is not to be despised. A Methodist church in Reading, Pa., has cleared off a debt of $800 by the aid of a penny subscription. The scheme met with such immediate favor that in a brief period of time 80,000 pennies were collected, the debt paid, and nobody felt it any more than if they had dropped a penny in the slot of a weighing machine.

A few weeks past, a correspondent from Plymouth predicted, through these columns that during the month of January the following days would be stormy:—10th, 15th, 17th, 19th, 21st, 22d, 23d, 24th, 25th and 29th. On consulting our diary we find that it did storm the 11th, 14th, 17th, 18th, 22d, 25th, 27th and 29th. For an amateur, I think that doing very well, in fact, nearly as well as some of our more famous weather prophets.—Bridgewater Independent.

A London dispatch says a Mr. Purbeck of Salem, Mass., has just purchased in Sheffield a greyhound named Gem of the Season for $3,000. This dog, besides carrying off first honers at the Birmingham dog-show, has taken 30 special prizes the past year.

Chicago had just nine murders a week in 1890.

Anecdotes.

Mother (to her little son)—"Johnnie, go to the butcher and see if he has pigs' feet."

Johnnie (on his return)—"Mamma, he had his boots on and I could not see his feet."

"What are these funny little green things?" asked Flossie of her country cousin, pointing to a number of peapods.

"Those are pease," said Tommy. "You can't fool me," retorted Flossie. "Pease come in big red can."

"Have you any large-sized gentleman's gloves?" he asked.

"How large-sized a gentleman?" inquired the salesman, with a smile of frosty, Bostonian severity.

Large enough, I think, sir," replied the customer, moving away, "to walk without any help to some other store where the clerks are not classical."

Stranger (to 7-year-old Boston boy)—"Say, bub, where's Boylston street?"

Boston boy—"While your mode of address sir, seems to me to savor of undue, not to say of unwarrantable, familiarity, you shall have the information you seek. You will perchance descry some distance up the street an imposing structure of commingled Renaissance and early Venetian architecture. The street for which you inquire is immediately contiguous."

Boston Theatres.

Tremont.

Next Monday night the favorite, Annie Pixley, will be at the Tremont for two weeks. The first week will be devoted to a reproduction of "22, Second Floor," which was so eminently successful last season. Miss Pixley in the dual role of the gentle wife and the dashing actress, the complications arising from the "mixing up" of these twin sisters, the extreme comicalities engendered by the capital plot of Mr. George H. Jessup's excellent play, have all won the regard of theatre goers, for no one is more certain of a welcome for the charm of her acting is kindred to the charm of her disposition which has the effect of making all about her happy. During her second week Miss Pixley presents with superb new scenery painted by Charles W. Witham, her new drama, "Kate: A Romance of the War," and there will be an extra matinee Monday, Feb. 23, in celebration of Washington's birthday.

Globe.

The last week of the Henry E. Dixey engagement will be given up to "Adonis" by special request. Mr. Dixey is always interesting but he is especially a favorite in "Adonis," and already the demand for tickets is very large. In farce or high comedy Dixey is always refined, graceful and entertaining, and during the past week his presentation of the "Seven Ages" has attracted large audiences. Today his "Seven Ages" will be presented afternoon and evening, and tickets for next week are now on sale for "Adonis."

Hollis Street.

The engagement of Mr. and Mrs. Kendall at the Hollis has been most successful the past week, every seat and standing room being taken at every presentation. Today's matinee and evening performance of "The Squire" closes the first week of the engagement, and next week, the closing week, two bills will be presented, "All for Me," a strong play, Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday evenings, and Wednesday's matinee. The remainder of the week, "The Weaker Sex" will be presented.

Boston Museum.

On the 23d inst. that most laughable of comedies, "The Solicitor," will enter upon its third month at the Museum, and, according to present indications, with no abatement of its present extraordinary success. This play, with that charming skit, "Betty's Finish," makes the term, "the laughing season," employed by the Museum management a most appropriate one, for, from rise to fall of curtain, in each play, the house resounds with the hilarious merriment of the audience. The business, even for the prosperous Museum, was never finer. Some audiences are so large that the orchestra are obliged to leave their seats, and the advance sale is always great. Laugh when you can, and thereto "The Solicitor" serves admirably.

Boston.

Hoyt's "Trip to Chinatown" has taken possession of the Boston theatre stage and by its mirth and go, is attracting many, who laugh, and laugh again and at the fall of the curtain on the closing act leave the theatre with light hearts and smiling face.

The Salem Gazette states that in a graveyard at Newbury are the graves of two sisters between whose deaths elapsed the period of one hundred and two years. The first of these sisters was Sally Johnston, who died October 9, 1776, aged two years; and the second Sarah Johnston, who was born 1779, and died March 11, 1879.

The play of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," not only maintains its drawing power, but a Boston publisher asserts that he still annually sells 30,000 copies of the book.

The German Immigration.

Says Professor Bryce in The American Commonwealth, "The enormous German immigration of the last thirty years might have been expected to have gone far towards Germanizing the American mind, giving it a taste for metaphysics on the one hand, and for minutely patient research on the other; it does not seem to have had either the one result or the other, or indeed any result whatever in the field of thought. It has enormously stimulated the brewing industry; it has retarded the progress of prohibition; it has broken down the strictness of Sabbath observance, and has indeed in some cities produced what is commonly called a Continental Sunday." Again he says, in reference to America, "She calls herself a new country; will she give the world a new philosophy, new views of religion, a new type of life in which plain living and high thinking may be more happily blended than we now see them in the Old World?"

Manners for Boys.

In the street—Hat lifted when saying "Good by" or "How do you do?" Also when offering a lady a seat or acknowledging a favor.

Keep step with any one you walk with. Always precede a lady upstairs, but ask if you shall precede her in going through a crowd or public place.

At the street door—Hat off the moment you step in a house or private office.

Let a lady pass first always, unless she asks you to precede her.

In the parlor—Stand till every lady in the room, also older people, are seated.

Rise if a lady enters the room after you are seated, and stand till she takes a seat.

Look people straight in the face when they are speaking to you.

Our Largest Bell.

The largest bell in America is that of Notre Dame Cathedral, Montreal, which hangs in the south tower. It is six feet high, eight feet seven inches in diameter, and weighs twenty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty pounds. It is ornamented with images of the blessed Virgin and St. John the Baptist, together with emblems of Agriculture, Commerce and Industry. It was cast in London, and bears this inscription in Latin: I was cast in the year of the Christian era 1847, the two hundred and second since the foundation of Montreal, the first of Pius the Ninth's pontificate, and the tenth of the reign of Victoria, Queen of England. I am the gift of the merchants, the farmers and the mechanics of 'Ville Marie.'" In the opposite tower hangs a chime of ten bells, the smallest weighing eight hundred and ninety-seven pounds, the largest six hundred and ninety-six pounds.

The largest bell in the United States is the alarm bell on City Hall, New York, which was cast by Blake of Boston. It is 6 feet high, 8 feet in diameter and weighs 23,000 pounds.—New England Magazine.

Living for One's Self.

Henry Ward Beecher says of men who have no care for others, but are contented with looking after their own ease and enjoyment, that they ought to be put into a coffin, for their life's work is ended. When God wanted sponges and oysters he made them, and put one on a rock and the other in mud. When he made man, he did not make him to be a sponge or an oyster; he made him with feet and hands, and head and heart, and vital blood and a place to use them, and he said to him, "Go to work!"

But I tell you if a man has come to that point where he is content, he ought to be put in his coffin, for a contented man is a sham! If a man has come to that state in which he says, "I do not want to know any more, or do any more, or be any more," he is in a state in which he ought to be changed into a mummy! Of all hideous things, a mummy is the most hideous; and of mummies, those are the most hideous that are running about the streets and talking!

The Care of the Brooms.

The rapidity with which brooms ordinarily wear out is surprising. This is partly due to leaving the broom standing on its brush end when not in use, but more to carelessness in handling. A piece of strong cloth, or, better yet, of old woven underflannel or stocking, should be drawn on over the handle and down below the place where the broom splints are stitched. A few stitches with strong cotton yarn should fasten this cover both at its lower edge and gather and fasten it around the handle, sewing the stitches through and through. This cover holds the broom splints together, and prevents their breaking out and the tearing off of the banding of a broom which repeated striking against doors and mop-boards and reaching under heavy pieces of furniture does.—Harper's Bazar.

SOME ADVICE. Do not get into the habit of laughing at elderly people. It is not only unladylike, but vulgar.

Do not think it clever to find out by pumping the private affairs of your friend. There is no reason why you should lay bare her heart for an inquisitive daw to peck at.

Do not get into debt, but if you have been guilty, deny yourself everything possible, that you may be free once more.

Do not introduce your girl friend to the gentleman visitor. Instead say, "Miss Brown, will you allow me to present Mr. Jones?"

Do not giggle when a smile would answer, and don't talk in a jesting way about things that are holy to other people—Ladies' Home Journal.

Three golden weddings in one family, and occurring within a short time of each other, is remarkable even in a community of long-lived people. In New Hampshire, recently, Deacon Thomas E. Folsom and wife of Exeter, celebrated their golden wedding, and the most interesting fact in connection with the anniversary is that Deacon Folsom's brother at Abington, Mass., also a deacon, some time ago celebrated his golden wedding, and a sister living at Tuftonborough observed the same event two years ago.

Gottfried Heller, a tailor 46 years old, died in New York, a few days ago, from a strange cause. He had been accustomed for years to bite off the ends of threads and swallow the remnants, and the doctors believe that the disease which ended his life was engendered by poisonous dyes in the thread.

Brockton is the largest last producing city in the country, her two factories having a capacity of 1,200 pairs a day.

The police of New York last year arrested 70,000 persons, of whom 19,000 were women.

The telephone poles all through the Cape below Middleboro are being taken down because it does not pay.

While a farmer of Skipback, Pa., was attending church his horse froze to death outside.

San Francisco is daily receiving large quantities of strawberries from the Pajaro valley.

The New York Charity Ball yielded over $16,000 for the Nursery and Children's Hospital.

The largest sum paid for a leasehold for a house in London for many years was paid lately for a house in Carlton House Terrace. The price was $350,000.

A real estate syndicate to erect cottage houses is talked of in Brockton.

Poetry.

When the New Wears Off.

He was a youth, and she, a maid,
Both happy, young and gay,
They loved—and life to them was fair
As one continuous May,
The croakers saw this happiness,
And said, "Ah, love is blind;
You're happy now, but care will come,
When the new wears off, you'll find."

They married, and then their life grew rich
With calmer, riper joy;
They were as man and wife more fond
Than when as girl and boy.
Their "friends" could not endure the sight,
And said, with worldly wit,
"It will not be so bright and fine
When the new wears off a bit."

Ah, well, the new wore off of course,
And then, what did they find?
An oldness which was better far,
For Love is not so blind
As selfish Care; and loving hearts
New joys will always meet,
So, when the new wears off, they'll find
Old love the more complete.

Miscellany.

DR. MARGARET.

BY MARY MORRIS.

When Madge Harrington, the beauty and madcap of the family, announced her determination to study medicine, it created such a commotion among her aunts and cousins, that would be too long a story even to try to tell. What protestations there were, what entreaties, what dismal prophecies of failure, or what another outcry there was when, at the end of her course, instead of settling in the city, she chose to accept Uncle Jeremy's offer of a partnership in his large practice, and bury herself in the country. Neither need I relate how Ben Harris followed her there for the express purpose of offering certain arguments of a personal nature on the subject, and came away with a decided disinclination to talk of his cousin or her doings. Nor even how he begged her photograph and, like the careless fellow that he was, lost it before he left the little hotel at the Junction. Nor yet how his friend and law partner Robert Cortright, only a few weeks after, found himself stranded at the same dreary little Junction house, and thought himself a very hardly used young man because he must stay there until morning.

It was a wretched place; he was angry having missed the train, and altogether in no very enviable frame of mind when he retired to his room where he gave the rickety stand a kick which brought to view a photograph." He gave a long whistle of astonishment as he held it up to the light, it was no rural Phyllis, but a beautiful girl photographed by Sarony.

There was no clue to its identity except the one word "Magaret" written across the back. Of course he carried it away with him, it would never do to leave it to fall into the hands of the next chance comer, so it was finally deposited in a secret drawer of his own private desk.

He never thought of showing his treasure trove to Ben Harris, who shared his office, his private sitting-room at the Windsor, and, up to this time, all his secrets. If he had done so, it is hard to tell who would have been most astonished, but, all the more surely for this reserve, there grew up in his mind an ideal woman, as visionary and unpractical as most such creatures are, but which he worshipped as ardently and apparently as hopelessly, as the old sculptor his marble woman.

Still he did not grow thin and melancholy after the orthodox manner, and when in the summer Ben proposed a bicycling tour which should have for its objective point the Harris country-house he made his preparations with the feeling that after a winter of good, hard work he had fairly earned his holiday. The family were hospitable in the good, old-fashioned way, and they came and went as they pleased, sometimes alone, sometimes with Ben's sister Carrie, a gay little witch, with a face he would never have thought of calling pretty had it not been for a certain mocking, elusive resemblance to the picture safely locked away at home. But the most adroit questioning failed to elicit any information, and Miss Harris grew a little impatient. "People seem always hunting for resemblances," she cried, "they even say I am like Madge Harrington, I am so little and dark."

What is she like!" he said, curiously.

"Like? I can't describe her; but you will have a chance to see for yourself. She is coming here, if measles and whooping-cough permit."

"Measles and whooping-cough!" repeated he, greatly mystified.

"Why, she is a doctor, you know."

"No, I don't know, and I devoutly hope she won't come; there is one of the species at home, the homeliest and most cold-blooded woman I ever knew; looks upon her patients simply as 'cases'—the scientific temperament her friends call it. I call it simply abominable."

"Madge isn't that sort at all, cried Carrie, angrily; "she is young and pretty."

"So much the worse, then," he interrupted. "I think all such women ought to be left on a desert island, to prey on each other, instead of on society."

"I more than ever hope she will come. I'd like to see you fall a victim," was the retort.

Measles prevailed against Carrie's wish, and he finished his visit in peace, which was marred by only one dispute, Ben declaring that he had enough of 'cycling,' and Mr. Cortright that he would carry out his original plan.

"I'll go home on the cars, like a Christian, and be there, ready to receive you, when you come, if you ever do. There's some awful roads about Randolph," Ben added.

"Madge can mend his bones, if he breaks them," said Carrie, mischievously; "she lives at Randolph."

He adhered to his original intention, in spite of all Ben's argument, and quite pitied Ben until the afternoon of the second day, when he came to some of the prophesied "awful roads."

He was struggling over a particularly rough bit toward a point where three roads met at acute angles, all equally bad and all apparently leading to nowhere in particular. He would have dismounted and taken the next few rods on foot, had he not discovered a stylish little wagon, drawn by a black pony, rapidly approaching the point of intersection. One glance enabled him to take in the whole establishment, and to decide that the driver must be a young lady, though he could not see her face distinctly. Should he meet her on foot, ingloriously dragging his "machine" after him? Perish the thought. He would pass that corner in a manner befitting the captain of the Wheel Club, even if he risked his neck in the attempt. But, alas, pride must have a fall, and the wheel striking a particular tough root, he took a header on a pile of stones by the roadside.

Things seemed very strange and indistinct that night. He was floating around in space, and the Margaret of his dream was near him. Sometimes she held his hand for a moment, and spoke to him in a low, clear voice; but he could not answer her. Then she disappeared, and he slowly came back to earth again, and found himself in a large, cool room, with a motherly-looking old lady sitting beside him.

"Will you please tell me just what has happened.

"Why yes; your leg's broken just below the knee—compound fracture, the doctor called it—and there's some bad cuts on your head; and you must keep quiet, and the doctor'll be here again at ten o'clock," she said.

I regret to say that Mr. Cortright made use of a naughty word. "You don't mean to say that you sent for that young woman to reduce a compound fracture."

"Now see here," said the old lady, energetically, "you haven't got any call to worry. There wan't no one else to do it, for the old doctor is away out West for his health, and there ain't no one for thirty miles around can equal her on a bone.

Just then there was a rattle of wheels in the front yard, and he looked up in bewilderment, as the young lady who had been the unwitting cause of his downfall entered. "You are not the doctor?" he said, slowly.

"I certainly am," was the prompt reply.

"I told you all about it, don't you remember?" said Mrs. Brown, but he was absolutely speechless with astonishment. She had removed her hat, and it certainly was the face of the picture. There were the same earnest eyes, the mischievous wrinkle about the corners of the mouth.

It was not imagination then when last night he thought Margaret was with him and took his hand, but hard professional reality. It was a grievous disappointment to have all his illusions destroyed in this fashion; of course, she could not be a doctor, and still be the Margaret of his dreams. He was a fool, an unmitigated fool, to build up a woman just from a face, and then fall in love with his own creation. He was cross and almost rude to her, but she never lost patience, and when he came to repentance and a better mind, received his apologies with a quiet dignity that made him more uncomfortable than before. But the climax came on the day when Ben Harris brought his crutches from the city, and he was allowed to hobble out on the wide porch.

"What do you think now about leaving all the women doctors on a desert island to prey on each other instead of on society?" Ben demanded. Mr. Cortright looked painfully, undeniably guilty.

"O, you needn't be so agonizingly penitent," continued his tormenter remorsefully, "Madge don't care, she has no personal human interest in you, regards you simply as a case, you know."

"Indeed, I have a very decided human interest in any one who is so misguided," she said, kindly, for she pitied his evident embarrassment. "He must be converted."

"I'm converted already, but you need not withdraw your human interest on that account. I have been such a troublesome case, let me try to redeem myself as an individual."

"If you think you can do any better in that capacity I would be tempted to try you," she answered, laughing.

"I'll hold you to that bargain," was the quick reply, but after Ben left he did not always find it an easy matter. When he begged to drive with her, she indulged him, at first, as she might a whimsical boy, leaving him to hold the horse before lonely farmhouses, while she made her visits.

Still their acquaintance progressed rapidly for he had the rare tact which taught him to devine her moods as if by instinct, so that, almost incessantly at first, she found herself leaving many of her anxieties in the darkened room she visited instead of carrying them with her, an ever-increasing load, to the end of the day. He never reminded her of her promise to regard him as an individual, instead of "Cortright, C., compound fracture, serious contusions about the head," but flattered himself that she was fast laying aside the professional manner and even growing to depend on his companionship and sympathy. Neither did he ask himself what he expected would result from it, a rising young lawyer, who had even distant views of the ermine, could hardly be expected to devote his life to driving about the country with a doctor, holding a very sedate black pony before the doors of high and low, even if the doctor was a young and handsome woman. He knew it could not last forever, and, when the end came, told himself bitterly that he might have expected it from the beginning; for he had staked everything on one throw and lost.

Though Dr. Harrington missed her patient more than she would admit, even to herself, she thought she did not regret her decision. Indeed there was very little time for regret, for there was an unusual amount of sickness that winter, and kind old Uncle Jeremy died suddenly on the homeward journey. The month of December was intensely cold, and on Christmas eve the wind swept through the valley, carrying the snow in blinding whirls that piled high above the fences, and the black pony fought his way along almost inch by inch. There was a bright fire in the grate and she sat down and spread her chilled fingers to the blaze. It seemed to her that she had never been so tired, she dreaded the morrow, and the next; would there be a hundred morrows like it? Could she endure them if there were? With a sudden, swift impulse she crossed the room and took up a little hand glass. Her own photograph stood on the mantel; Uncle Jeremy had placed it there and she had never disturbed any of his belongings. She looked from that to the face in the glass. There were dark rings under the eyes, it was pale, faded and anxious. The lamplight fell full upon her bent head and revealed a single, shining white hair, the first she had ever found. She pulled at it spitefully, with a queer sinking of the heart. "Am I growing gray at twenty-five?" she said, piteously.

Just then some one stumbled up the steps, and there was a sharp ring at the bell. Most women hesitate before answering a late ring, but she only shivered as thought, "Must I go out again tonight?" A tall man stood in the little porch with his coat collar turned up over the lower part of his face, and a sealskin cap drawn down over his eyes, so that nothing was visable but a very frosty moustache. "May I come in and wish you a Merry Christmas?" said a clear, ringing voice. The tell-tale blood rushed into her face, and there was a suspicious quiver in her voice as she answered him.

"I didn't frighten you?" he added. "I should not have dared to stop you to-night only for the light."

"No, I was not frightened, only I am rather nervous, I think, and your coming was so sudden and unexpected."

"You never used to be nervous, and how thin and pale you look, you must be ill."

"O, no," she said, struggling vainly to regain her composure, "I am only tired out, there is a great deal of sickness, and I am busy night and day."

"You are killing yourself," he replied. "How many miles have you driven to-day?"

"Thirty, perhaps."

"And you will do the same to-morrow, and to-morrow," unconsciously repeating her own thoughts. "You shall not, I have tried to forget you as you said, and I cannot, I will not try any longer."

Next day a friend of Mr. Cortright's, who was starving in the city, while he waited for patients, received a telegram summoning him to go to Randolph to take charge of a large country practice. A few weeks later in the season, when there was an accident at one of the quieter winter resorts on the Carolina coast, and no surgeon at hand, the local paragrapher related that "A very charming lady from the North, evidently a bride, improvised a splint, and set the broken bone as calmly as though it was an every day occurrence."—Godey's Lady's Book.

He Surprised Eliza.

John Roberts, of North East, is a farmer well enough to do, but he had always been eccentric about his clothes. Until a week or two ago he had not been known to buy a new suit of clothes for years. The ones he wore had been so often patched and repatched that no bit of the original warp and woof was visible. This personal slovenliness on the part of her husband was a source of constant annoyance to Mrs. Roberts, who is a woman of exceptional neatness. She long ago became so ashamed of his appearance that she would no longer accompany him to town to do her trading. This singular characteristic of the farmer was not owing to penuriousness, for he was a liberal man in all his dealings.

A few days ago he went down to town to do a little trading, and to the utter astonishment of the town he purchased a new suit of clothes for himself. His new clothes were done up in a package on the wagon seat beside him when he started home that night. It was a dark night. Farmer Roberts had got half way home when a brilliant idea struck him. He stopped his horse on a bridge where the road crosses the east branch.

"Ill do it, by gum!" he said. "I'll do it and su'prise Eliza!"

Thereupon the farmer rose up in the wagon and began to take off the patched and repatched clothes he had worn so long. As he removed a garment he tossed it into the creek, until he had tossed them all in and had nothing on but his shirt.

"Great apple sass!" he exclaimed. But won't Eliza be su'prised!"

Then Farmer Roberts reached for the package that he had his new clothes in. It wasn't on the seat. Farmer Roberts got down and reached under the seat. The package wasn't there. Then he felt all over the bottom of the wagon. The package wasn't anywhere on the bottom. Farmer Roberts rose up in the wagon and looked back along the pitch dark road.

Then he climbed back in his seat, and away the horses went for home. The night was chilly and there was three miles to go. When Farmer Roberts reached home and climbed out of his wagon he paused.

"The hull idee didn't work," said he, "but I'll bet nine dollars that I su'prise Eliza!"

That he did no one doubts, but when he got up in the morning and went out to the barn, clad in the hired man's overalls, and saw his package of new clothes hanging by its string on the brake handle at the side of the wagon, he was a little surprised himself.—Cor. New York Sun.

Docking Horses.

There is a petition before the Massachusetts legislature praying that a law be enacted for the protection of horses which have been mutilated by the heartless practice of "docking," and asking for a hearing on the same. As is to be expected the M. S. P. C. A. is pushing the matter, and it is hoped the society will succeed in its attempts to bring just condemnation on those who are guilty of such acts. The law asked to make it compulsory to protect horses whose tails have been docked, with nets during the warm weather when flies are troublesome.

Cleaning Colored Woolens.

Four ounces of white castile soap, four ounces of ammonia, two ounces of alcohol, two ounces of glycerine. Shave the soap in one quart of water over the fire. When dissolved add four quarts of rain water, and when nearly cold the other ingredients. Bottle and keep in a cool place. One cup of this mixture in two quarts of water will be sufficient for ordinary use. Now lay the goods on an old sheet, and iron rapidly and lightly on the wrong side, and then roll tightly on a curtain poll or any round piece of wood. If this is carefully done you do away with the creases done by folding. For black silk or cloth dissolve one tablespoonful of borax and one tablespoonful of indigo in one pint of warm water. Sponge the pieces well and lay smoothly one above the other, and if possible lay in the sun to dry.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

National Sailors' Home.

Now that we are building up a new navy and efforts are being made to man our vessels with American seamen, would it not have a discouraging effect on such inlistments if they thought that in after years they would have to become the servants of servants at some naval home, as are some of the inmates here? They have to clean the rooms, make the beds, and other duties pertaining to that line of business, for the farmers employed here; and one old veteran has to perform the menial duties for the superintendent's coachman. Connect that fact with what the secretary of war says of "Jack Tars" in his letter and you will more readily observe what little respect there is shown to an American man-of-warsman here.

Do you not think, Mr. Editor, that the readers of the PATRIOT and the citizens of Quincy will, after the recital of these facts, agree with us that there is urgent need of a radical change in the management and some of the managers of this institution, and make it as it was originally intended to be, in every sense of the word, a National Sailors' Home?

Allow us, if space permits, to look back to the stirring times of the war, to recall some of the memories connected with the inception of this Home, in order to better inform your readers of the deep and broad interest there was felt in the establishment of the National Sailors' Home, and what the officers and men of the navy contributed at that time in money for its success:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
WASHINGTON, Nov. 8, 1864.

GENTLEMEN: It is gratifying to know that, while recommending the soldier, there are those who forget not the sailor. I cannot doubt that your fair for the benefit of this deserving but too neglected class, who cheerfully encounter ocean hardships and danger and fearlessly peril their lives in battle for their country, will be successful; and I am confident it must have in every respect a beneficent influence. My best wishes are with you in your noble efforts. I am very respectfully,

Your obedient servant,
GIDEON WELLS,
Secretary of War.

To the Managing Committee of the National Sailors' Home.

At the commencement of the war our navy consisted of ninety vessels, manned by 7600 officers and men; at the end of the war there was 7000 officers and 51,500 men. There were also in the navy yards 16,840 men. March 10, 1865, there were 679 vessels in the navy. These vessels mounted 4647 guns. Our navy at the close of the war was the most powerful afloat. For lack of space I will give your readers only the last clause of the circular issued by the commanding officers of the different blockading squadrons to the officers and men under their command:

FLAG STEAMER PHILADELPHIA.
PORT ROYAL, S. C., June 24, 1864.

I shall tender one day's pay to the Sailors' Fair and invite every officer and man to do likewise.

JOHN A. DALGREN,
Rear Admiral, South Atlantic Blockading Squadron.

On that basis money was contributed by all officers and men of that magnificent navy, also from the navy yards; netting in all about $85,000 toward the fund for the establisment of this Home. Yet one of the managers, Mr. Crane, who recently assailed the valor of our dead, also neglected and grossly insulted all the inmates of this home, has had the audacity to state that it was not the public's business how the funds of this institution are expended; and that if they wanted to spend money on the dyke to the neglect of the farm it was their own affair. But we will inform him it is the public's business and also the business of veteran sailors in and out of the Home to see that no one squanders the fund, for it was most by the generous and loyal men and women of this country the money was given to rear and maintain this Home. Besides, every stone in the foundation of this Home, every timber in this building has the money of naval veterans in it, and every foot of ground belonging to this Home has their money in it. It was built for them, and them only, as a home, whenever forced to seek its shelter.

The Waste at a Summer Hotel.

In accordance with the long established and destructive idea which has prevailed in the best hotels of the United States from time immemorial, at least twice as much food is served as the guest can eat. The result is that at least fifty barrels of waste are carted away from this hotel each day by a man employed for that purpose. In the rush consequent upon the feeding of so many persons silverware and other articles in use in the dining rooms are constantly being thrown into the receptacles for this waste material, and consequently the services of men are required to search and rescue these utensils.

At a certain seaside hotel 3,000 persons can be fed at one time. One Saturday and Sunday nearly 20,000 persons were catered to between the hours of 11.30 A. M. and 1 P. M. Judging from the amount of food devoured, every man, woman and child visiting the beach that day must have been hungry. The value of the silverware and crockery used by this immense crowd amounted in the aggregate to $30,000. Each one required three napkins, one for personal use and the other two for the waiter's use. Five plates were used with each order, no matter how trivial, which ran the total number of pieces of crockery up to 75,000.—New York World.

For Neuralgia.

Boil a handful of lobelia in a half pint of water, strain and add a teaspoonful of fine salt. Wring cloths out of the liquid, very hot, and apply till the pain ceases, changing as fast as cold, then cover with a dry cloth for a while to prevent taking cold. Two large tablespoonsful of cologne and two teaspoonsful of fine salt mixed in a bottle makes an excellent inhalent for facial neuralgia. Horse radish, prepared the same as for the table, applied to the temple or wrist, is recommended.

She Was "Particular" Like.

"John, go up to Mrs. Swandown's and get that barrel of flour we sent up yesterday. Head it up and drive around the block and when you go back open the other head and she'll think it another barrel and 'twill suit." Thus said a groceryman who had a very particular customer. But these particular kind though they may be deceived in the matter of flour, are never cheated in their soap, for they buy Brussels, the economical soap. The name is on the goods.

"The Rat in the Pantry."

This fit illustration will be long remembered by those of us who were privileged to listen to the masterly address of Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, before the Wollaston C.T.Union Tuesday, Feb.10. Nothing could better illustrate the "temperance efforts" of our Christian politician who thinks to stop the "saloon rat" which is working ruin in our State pantry, by such cleansing reforms (?) in the adjoining rooms, as high license, local option, &c. What does the vile poacher, who is gnawing through the flour barrel and molasses cask of the nation, care for the legislation which simply dusts the parlor of the State? Shame on the limber tongued apologist, for his party's crime, in condoning this crowning curse of the land. Shame on the legislator who holds his party's "success" dearer than the home and the public welfare. Who tells you that he must await a change of public opinion before he can vote right. Who talks about "a revenue from high license." A price of blood to the State, in exchange for blasted homes, ruined bodies and souls, and hell itself let loose in the land!

If such be a right view of the venal legislator, what shall we say of the intelligent voter who elects him to office. Who loves purity and the home not less, but his political party more? Who is willing to see annually "eighty thousand" in our country, go down to a drunkard's hell, sooner than lose a party triumph, by losing the saloon vote. Post mortem virtues of a party, won't save its present and future record. When men are sinking beneath the waves of woe all about us, shall we, as was said, stop to parley about the cost and "expediency" of throwing the life-line? What a blunted sense of moral right, which puts party expediency before personal duty and individual accountability. When will our politicians and their pliant following learn this truth, that, "He that walketh uprightly walketh surely."

Ruined Cities of Yucatan.

There are between sixty and seventy ruined cities in Yucatan, so far as they have been discovered. Within a radius of one hundred miles from Merida are such magnificent examples as Mayapan, Ake, Chichen-Itza, Rabah and Labna but none is more interesting and grand than Uxmal, about seventy-six miles by road travel from Merida. By far the finest building in the city, both from its commanding position on a lofty eminence and the completeness of its preservation, is the Royal Palace, otherwise known as the Cassa de Gobernador in Spanish, writes a correspondent. It stands on the topmost of three terraces of earth—once, perhaps faced with stone, but now crumbled, broken and in a state of heterogeneous decay. The lowermost and largest is 575 feet long; the second 545 feet long, 250 feet wide and 25 feet high, while the third and last is 360 feet in length, 30 in breadth, and 19 feet in height, and supports the building, which has a front of 322 feet, with a depth of only 39, and a height of but 25 feet.

It is entirely of stone, without ornament to a height of about 10 feet, where there is a wide cornice, above which the wall is a bewildering maze of sculpture. The roof was flat, and once covered with cement, in the opinion of some travellers, but is now covered with tropical plants, trees and verdure. There are three large door-ways through the eastern wall about eight feet square, giving entrance into a series of apartments, the largest of which is 60 feet long and 27 deep, divided into two rooms by a thick wall. The ceiling of each room is a triangular arch, capped by flat blocks at a height of 23 feet above the floor. The latter, like the walls and jams of the doorway, is of smooth-faced stones that have once been covered with cement.

Making a Home.

It seems a pity that the young woman who is about to establish a home and has a sum of money to spend for its garnishing cannot be persuaded from laying it out all at once. She robs herself of so much future enjoyment. The spick and span sets of furniture which are carelessly ordered from an upholsterer, and carried home and stood around her parlors by his men, will never afford her half the satisfaction she can get in a room for which today she buys a chair, and next week, seeing there must be a table to accompany the chair, she starts on a fresh shopping excursion, and find a table which is exactly what she was looking for; and in another month, discovering the need of a bookcase or a screen, she has again the delight of the hunt, and the gratification of obtaining the prettiest screen and bookcase in the city.

Such a room is a growth, a gathering together, of household treasures little by little, and piece by piece. Each article, bought only when the need arises, or when something is happily found to just meet the need, will have a family history which makes it an entertaining as well as a valuable possession. Each couch and footstool is an achievement; each rug and curtain represents a triumph. Such a home, built up gradually, with careful planning in each part, with thought and loving consideration in all its details, acquires a meaning far deeper than could be purchased by the longest purse from the most fashionable cabinet-maker.—Harper's Bazar.

Cold Comes Through the Feet.

A noted medical author observed: "No doubt much of la grippe comes through the feet. Thin-soled shoes, or thick soles, standing on ice, or snow, or cold wood, until the sole attains the same degree of cold as that on which it rests; then cold feet, cold legs, cold abdomen, cold lungs, cold in the throat, in the head; the eyes, the nose, the mouth speaking witnesses, testifying to the body resting on the feet and the brain resting on the body, that a plain violation of every reasonable rule of health has been permitted, to be paid in penalty of suffering and pain of lost time, of care and anxiety of friends, it may be of death—is not this and this result sufficient warning?"—Machias Union.

☞ Seattle, Wash., sends its garbage out to sea and it affords a feast for the gulls. Whenever the garbage scow is towed out, from 1500 to 2000 of these birds follow it to its destination, and the men on it claim that they scarcely have room to work, as the gulls cluster around them in swarms, all fighting one another to get on the scow and select their food.

Burglaries.

Burglars were about Wednesday night, their scene of action being at South Quincy. The places to receive a call from these unwelcome visitors being the blacksmith shop of the Merry Mount Granite Co., Edward Russell's grain store and W. H. Doble's general store.

The first place visited was doubtless the blacksmith shop, where the tools with which the other breaks were made were taken. Russell's being near, this was the next place visited, where entrance was had by forcing the latch on the back door, which was then easily opened, when they ransacked the office and took $7 from the money drawer.

Doble's store was then visited, where they gained entrance by forcing the catch off a window in Mr. Doble's private office; once inside they had free access and proceeded to fit themselves out for the remainder of the winter with new wearing apparal. The articles taken were black stockings, lace and congress boots, shirts, drawers, rubbers, pants and neckties. It is needless to add that the goods taken were of the best quality. These goods they put on, leaving their old clothes on the floor.

They also tried to open the cash registers in which there was money, but in this they were unsuccessful.

For some months Quincy has been annoyed by petty robberies, assaults, etc. Officers were pretty well satisfied who the guilty parties were, but it was difficult to get evidence which would lead to their conviction.

The fact that the burglars took off their shoes and left them behind, wearing off new ones, told Constable Furnald that if he could find the fellows he would find the stolen shoes on their feet.

A warrant was sworn out against the suspected parties and Deputy Langley, Constable Furnald and Officer Crooker thus armed proceeded to Boston and soon found William J. Keegan and John J. Ford in the saloon of John Lyons on South street.

The first thing that attracted the attention of the officers was the fact that they wore new neckties of the style stolen from W. H. Doble. Further search revealed that they wore new shoes, and new handkerchiefs were also found on their persons.

The boxes from which the shoes had been stolen had been carefully saved, and the shoes being new the size was not obliterated. These were found to correspond and also the style. The neckties and handkerchiefs have also been identified.

Keegan and Ford were arraigned in the Quincy Court Friday morning, the latter on several counts. The hearing was postponed until Saturday. The former is held in $1000 bail and the latter in $1,500, which they were unable to obtain.

Keegan is an old offender and has before been convicted of burglary, for which he was committed.

Sixty-Second Anniversary.

On the 15th inst., Mr. and Mrs. William Field of this city celebrated at their home on Adams street, the sixty-second anniversary of their marriage, gathering around them on this occasion their four children, their grandchildren and great grand children. Mr. and Mrs. Field we believe are the oldest married couple in the city, having travelled through life together twelve years over half a century, a very rare occurrence. Mr. Field, who is of the firm of Frederick & Field, granite manufacturers, is we are pleased to learn, able to visit his place of business most every day. Mrs. Field is bright and cheery and entertaining, and enjoys company as well as she ever did, and it gives her great pleasure to see her old friends. This worthy couple received many tokens of love and respect from their family on this occasion, while many outside of their family circle kindly remembered them. Seventeen drew around the table to partake of the anniversary supper.

Street Railway.

It will be noticed by the railroad advertisement that more cars are to be run between West Quincy and Quincy Centre, also between Quincy Point and the Centre, on and after Monday next. This is, we think, as it should be. Our citizens, particularly on the West Quincy route, have not in the past been well accommodated. They have often been obliged to wait a long time for a car and then perhaps find it full and be compelled to stand up. That certainly is not a wise way to build a good business. Let our citizens have all the conveniences that can consistantly be given, and our word for it, the company will prosper and be able in a few years to pay good dividends to its stockholders.

The road has a live superintendent who intends to give it his time and attention, and if he does it will prosper. As Mr. Weeks, the new superintendent, has had many years' experience on street railways, his knowledge will be a great help to the road and a blessing to our people.

Insurance on Public Buildings.

A writer who seems to be posted on insurance says it will not cost the city over $440 per year to insure $100,000 on its public buildings:

$57,500 on wood buildings at 2 1-4 per cent for 5 years,	$1293.75
$42,500 on brick buildings, rate not fixed, but ought not to more than 1 1-2 per cent for 5 years,	637.50
Or for 5 years,	$1931.25

Say 2000 for 5 years, or 400 per year, to which must be added interest on the amount paid for premiums which if you figure carefully you will find will not exceed $440 per year.

Musical Club Concert.

The Quincy Musical club scored a success at its fourth public concert given in Faxon hall, Wednesday evening, all ths seats being taken.

The leading feature was the sacred cantata "The Daughter of Jairus" in which the solo parts were well taken by Miss Grace M. Isaac, soprano; Dr. G. B. Rice, baritone, and Mr. Charles A. Chase tenor. The chorus was not as large or strong as on previous occasions.

The most pleasing part of the programme were the readings of Mr. Clarence Afton Wheeler, who was down for two numbers, to one of which he gave an encore.

Mr. Sumner Coolidge, the conductor, sang two solos, which were much appreciated; also one by Mr. George W. Buck.

Miss Emma Coolidge was the accompanist, and also gave a difficult piano solo.

A Pleasant Anniversary.

Quite a number of the friends of Mr. and Mrs. George Crane assembled at their house Wednesday evening to celebrate the forty-fourth anniversary of the genial host's birth. During the evening his wife presented him with a life size crayon of herself in a very massive frame on an easel, he was also the recipient of a handsome cup and saucer in a case and a gold mounted whip from his guests.

The evening was spent in a very enjoyable manner and the guests departed at a late hour after participating in one of Mrs. Crane's recherche feasts.

AMONG THE EDITORS.

AT A MEETING of the Boston Executive Business Association Monday evening, the subject of adoption of the Australian system in regard to land records was taken up. It was explained by Mr. Josiah Quincy that the chief feature of this system is the registration of the title instead of the deed and the guaranteeing of that title by the State to all future purchasers. A simple transfer of the certificate from the register would then transfer the property at a very slight expense.

The examination of all titles would be made by the State, which would guarantee them, and levy a small tax to meet cases where it might be necessary to extinguish a claim. A resolution was adopted for a legislative commission to investigate the subject.

We do not know whether Gov. Russell had this special system in view in his recommendation to the Legislature on the subject, but a simplification of the transfer of real property is a very desirable thing. In the Western states, where the titles were acquired by the government and the records are based on government surveys, there is no occasion for litigation about titles, and a piece of property can be traced through every change of ownership with the greatest ease.—New Bedford Standard.

Clerks' Concert and Dance.

Faxon hall was altogether too small Thursday evening to accommodate the many friends of the Quincy Mercantile Clerks' Benevolent Association, who had gathered not only to listen to the excellent concert provided and to enjoy the dancing but also to testify to their regard for this useful body of young men.

The programme for the concert was a varied one and was enjoyed to the utmost, the several numbers were well rendered and received hearty and well deserved encores, especially number twelve, which was a trick banjo solo by Mr. Frank Bassick, who handled this instrument in a wonderful manner, holding it in every conceivable position, yet all the while playing and keeping good time. The piano duet by Misses L. and F. Mason received two encores, the violin solo by Master John Lyons three, and the Acme Quartette four. The other numbers on the programme received encores to which they generously responded. As the advertised programme was changed somewhat we published it as used:

The concert over, the floor was soon cleared of the seats and Bryant's orchestra took its position on the stage and the grand march commenced, being led by Floor Director Frank W. Monroe and Mrs. Monroe, who were followed by some thirty couple. Many who did not join in the march, however, joined in the remainder of the order of nine numbers besides the fancies.

Floor Director Monroe was assisted by Joseph P. Prout and James F. Allen, and the following aids: H. L. Boutin, C. E Twombly, A. F. Thompson, G. H. Ferguson, Fred Goss, Arthur A. Mitchie, J. W. Walsh, W. G. Kane, J. L. Ferguson, F. W. Miller, B. N. Pinkham, R. J. Foley, Jr.

The whole affair was admirably managed and was a complete success and will net the organization something like $60. Bryant's orchestra gave good satisfaction.

To the Honorable the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, sitting within and for the County of Norfolk:

RESPECTFULLY Represents your petitioner, Margaret A. Babcock, that she is and for a long time has been the owner of a piece or parcel of land situated on Willard Street in Quincy, in said County of Norfolk, which said land is bounded and described as follows, to wit:—

Westerly on Willard Street about twelve (12) rods: southerly on land formerly of George McCullen about eight (8) rods: easterly on land of J. W. Robinson about fourteen (14) rods: northerly on land formerly of William F. Johnson about eight rods, or however otherwise bounded, containing about one hundred and four (104) square rods, more or less:

That said property was conveyed to her by a deed dated August 15, 1877, from Charles F. Babcock, Margaret H. Babcock, Josiah Babcock, and Flora M. Babcock, being the heirs-at-law of the late Josiah Babcock of Milton, said deed being recorded in the Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 495, folio 54: that the late Josiah Babcock came into possession of said premises through one Joseph Corliss by deed dated October 22nd, 1849, recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 190, folio 182: that the record title of said property now owned by your petitioner is encumbered by an undischarged mortgage given by said Joseph Corliss, while he was owner, to one Robert Lane, for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars and interest, dated August 3, 1849, for the term of three years, said mortgage deed being recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 189, folio 153: that since the said deed of August 15, 1877 to your petitioner, your petitioner has had possession of said premises: that the possession of the several owners and occupants of said premises has been continous and uninterrupted for a period of more than twenty years since the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the performance of the conditions thereof, namely, August 3, 1852: that no payment has been made within twenty years on the debt secured by said mortgage, and no other act has been done by any one of the occupants in recognition of the valid existence of said mortgage: that said mortgage constitutes a cloud upon her title to said premises: that the respondent is the mortgagee named in said undischarged mortgage and the only party known to your petitioner interested in said mortgage, and that your petitioner does not know the whereabouts of said mortgagee.

Your petitioner therefore prays that due notice be given to the respondent and all other parties interested, by publication or otherwise, as may be ordered, of this petition: that a hearing be had, and that the Court will order a decree to be entered which shall set forth the facts as herein alleged and the finding of the Court in accordance therewith, to the end that said decree may be duly recorded in the registry of deeds as provided by Statutes of 1882, Chapter 237, and that thereafter no action shall be brought by any person to enforce said mortgage.

MARGARET A. BABCOCK,
By her Attorneys,

CITY COUNCIL.

Eighteen members of the City Council were present at the regular meeting Monday evening, including Messrs. Wilde and Rinn who were elected at the recent special election. These new members were sworn in immediately after roll call. The absentees were Councilmen Duffield, Fallon, Little and Powers.

Assignments.

President Thompson assigned the new members as follows: Councilman Wilde on the Committee on Finance, Accounts, State Aid, Claims and Salaries; Councilman Rinn on Committees of Sewers and Drains and Fire Department and Police.

Appointment.

Mayor Fairbanks notified the Council of the appointment of Joseph H. Kelly as constable without pay; placed on file.

Also, of the appointment of William H. Caldwell, as weigher of coke, subject to confirmation. The latter was confirmed.

Reardon Street.

The Mayor forwarded a communication of Commissioner Ewell setting forth that the appropriation for Reardon street was insufficient. With edgestone and paved gutter on one side he estimated the cost at $1675. Referred to Committee on Streets.

Claims for Damages.

The Mayor forwarded the claims of Joseph H. Costello for damages on Adams street, and Emma Castiglioni for damages on Penn street. Referred to Committee on Claims.

School Estimates.

The School Committee submitted the following estimates for schools for the ensuing year; the last column being added by the PATRIOT:

	1891.	1889.
Salaries, fuel and care of rooms,	$50,925	$44,100
Transportation,	2,000	1,200
Repairs,	2,500	2,000
Incidental expenses,	5,000	4,100
Books and stationery,	2,500	2,300
Evening Drawing Schools,	1,000	1,000
Evening Common Schools,	1,200	1,200
	$65,125	$55,900

Upon motion of Councilman Bryant the communication was laid on the table, and fifty copies ordered to be printed.

A suggestion of Councilman Jones to include an itemized account of the expenses of 1890 was adopted.

More School Accommodations.

A communication of the School Committee setting forth the need of an addition of four rooms to the John Hancock schoolhouse. Referred to the Committee on Public Buildings.

Petitions.

Of George Enderle and others for electric light on Willard street near Milton line. To Committee on Lights.

Of William Mulligan for increase of State Aid. To Committee on State Aid.

Of Henry Chubbuck for renewal of license for Faxon hall.

Of Robert J. Clifford for public carriage license.

Of E. G. Sanborn for common victualler's license.

The City Clerk was authorized to grant the above applications.

To Insure Schoolhouses.

The Committee on Public Buildings reported that good business policy demands that insurance to the amount of $100,000 be placed upon the school buildings of the city, distributed as follows viz:

Coddington School,	$10,000
High "	4,000
John Hancock "	15,000
Wollaston "	15,000
Washington "	7,000
Adams "	9,000
Willard (when completed),	27,500
Quincy	12,500

And that the Commissioners of Public Works be requested to report to this Council, the amount of premiums required to effect such insurance at five year rates, in good stock companies.

Plans for Remodelling.

The Committee on Public Buildings reported having examined a rough plan of the necessary alterations of City Hall, and that it was of the opinion that the interior arrangement can be so reconstructed as to afford comfortable accommodations for all heads of departments, without material change in outside appearance of the structure, and at a moderate cost.

Report adopted, and an order to that effect was ordered to a second reading.

State Aid.

The Committee on State Aid recommended $6 a month to Mr. E. F. Thayer and $4 to his wife. Adopted.

Legacies from 1890.

The Committee on Streets recommended that the order calling for $6000 for sidewalks be rejected. Report accepted.

The same committee reported no action advisable on the petition for re-location of the street railway tracks on Hancock street. Report accepted.

The same committee reported leave to withdraw on the petition for a sidewalk on Willard street.

Warren Avenue Bridge.

The Committee of Streets on the petition of George E. Thomas for a bridge across the Old Colony on the line of Warren avenue, reported it in their opinion to be an unnecessary expense to the city at the present time and therefore unwise to recommend. In the first place it was not necessary to cross the railroad to get to the Wollaston railroad station, neither is it necessary to cross the railroad to come to Quincy, or to go to any store. It might be a benefit to a few of the residents near the railroad to visit one another and it might be a benefit to anyone that had land to sell, and your committee recommended leave to withdraw.

Councilman Sherman thought there were unnecessary reflections in the report, and moved that the last part be eliminated.

Councilman Jones and Bryant saw no reflections that were disrespectful as claimed while the former did not believe the city could act.

The amendment was at first declared carried, but was lost on verification.

Culverts.

Councilman Jones made some inquiries concerning the petitions referred to the Committee on Streets, relative to a culvert on Hancock street, Atlantic, and also one on Hancock street, near Cottage avenue, and then upon his motion, the petition were referred to the Committee on Sewers and Drains.

Repairs of School Houses.

Councilman Bryant offered an order which was adopted calling for an opinion from the City Solicitor of the meaning of "care of school building" as used in the charter.

Special Election.

Councilman Morton offered an order, that warrants be issued for a special election in Ward One for one Councilman, March 5. Adopted.

Renewal of Licenses.

Councilman Sherman offered an order authorizing the City Clerk to renew licenses. Adopted.

Garfield Street.

Councilman Warner offered an order requesting the Mayor to call the attention of the Commissioner of Public Works to the wretched condition of Garfield street. He championed the order and it was adopted.

Minor Officers.

Councilman Jones offered an order that the Committee on Elections be requested to nominate fence viewers, measurers of wood and bark and field drivers at the next meeting. Adopted.

Atlantic Avenue.

Councilman Pope offered an order that the Committee on Streets consider the expediency of rebuilding Atlantic avenue. Adopted.

License.

An order granting a common victualler's license to A. P. Rousse was adopted.

Adjourned at 9.05.

Found Dead.

Tuesday shortly after 10 o'clock, workmen passing through the old Adams barn which is being moved across the track just south of the Quincy Adams station, discovered an unknown man laying in the feed trough apparently asleep. Thinking he was drunk, Deputy Langley was notified who discovered that he was indeed asleep, but that sleep from which one ever awakens. Medical Examiner Gilbert was notified and the remains placed in charge of Undertaker Hall.

The man was apparently about 35 years of age, and wore a pair of blue overalls and jumper of the same. He also had a coat of dark mixed goods and a woolen cap on. His hair, what there was of it, was black and he wore a quite heavy red moustache, and the remainder of his face looked as though he had been recently shaved.

In his pocket was a pair of woolen stockings, a handkerchief and a letter addressed to Henry Jacobs, Jamaica Plain, care of Henry Shaw, 83 Green street. This letter was signed by A. W. Cahoon, Wareham, Mass., and the purport of it was to the effect that he had found a job for him and it was supposed the unfortunate man was on his way to accept the job, as he was seen Monday afternoon about 4.15 in company with two other men on the railroad near Baxter's bridge by Mr. Golden, the ticket agent at Quincy Adams.

Mr. Golden spoke to him and the man said he was sick and hungry and wanted some change to buy something to eat with, and said if he could only get to Avon he would be all right. Mr. Golding advised him to go to the lockup, but this the man did not want to do for he was afraid he would be arrested.

He started up the track, and, as it is supposed that he was feeling sick and perhaps tired, entered the building and lay down for a rest. Mr. Golden says he does not think the man had been drinking.

The body of the man at Undertaker Hall's still remains unidentified. An item in Thursday morning's Globe from Jamaica Plain says:

"At the boarding-house, 83 Green street, Jamaica Plain, nothing is known of Henry Jacobs, who is supposed to be the man found dead Tuesday at Quincy. Last week a letter was received for him and addressed care Henry Shaw, 83 Green street, which was sent to Mr. Shaw, who is head gardener at Long island, Boston harbor. Shaw was expecting the letter, as he left word that if a letter addressed to him for Henry Jacobs came it should be sent to Shaw's present address."

Undertaker Hall being shown the above said that in addition to what has already been published, as found on the body, was a permit for a ten days' lease of absence for ——Barry dated Feb. 16, from the Long Island poor farm. This is undoubtedly the man, but whether his name was Jacobs or Barry is not known.

Public Hearing.

The fisheries and game committee gave a hearing at the State House on Friday, on an order to repeal so much of the act of 1886 concerning the better preservation of birds and game as relates to pursuing any wild fowl with or by the aid of a sailboat or steam launch. The principal speakers in favor of repealing this portion of the statutes were some four or five members of the South Boston and other yacht clubs. They desired that they might be permitted to sail down the Cape shore and to pursue game by means of sailing boats and steam launches as a means of pleasure. The distance necessary to go for this game they claim is too great to make the voyage open boat. Birds can be pursued with greater success by means of steam launches.

These yachtmen were strong in their affirmation that they only went gunning for sport, and intimated that a living could not be made at the business.

Capt. J. P. Hodges of Osterville appeared as a remonstrant. He considered that the sea fowl had increased since the enactment of this law. He was afraid the birds would be frightened off our shores if the gunners were allowed such an advantage.

Herbert T. Whitman of Quincy, said he objected to allowing steam launches and sailboats to pursue fowl on such natural feeding grounds as exist in Quincy Bay and off Brant Rock.

Mr. Thomas Curtis of Quincy, said he had seen a number of steam launches start a flock of fowl in the water in his vicinity every six minutes for an hour. He was opposed to allowing the use of such craft in the waters of our Massachusetts bays. In outside waters he had no objection.

Birthday Party.

Master Henry Francis Barker, only son of Mrs. George A. Barker, entertained his young friends Saturday evening from 5.30 to 9.30 at his home on Greenleaf street, the occasion being his thirteenth birthday. The evening was spent in dancing to the music of a violin and piano. Mr. William Wilson was pianist and prompter and Mr. Joshua E. Hanson violinist. Dancing was interspersed with games and Miss Flossie R. Emery was the fortunate winner of the first prize and Miss Ruth Randall the second, while of the boys Master Robert Porter was the victor and Master Harry Rogers had to content himself with the booby prize. Sandwiches, cake and ices were served during the evening. It was one of the merriest parties given this season and all the young people departed for home as happy as happy could be, thanking their young host and Mrs. Barker for a most enjoyable time.

Encampment Meeting.

A meeting of the Royal Purple degree members interested in the formation of an encampment of the I. O. O. F., at Quincy, was held Monday evening. Some fifteen of the petitioners for the charter were present and paid over their money. Messrs. N. B. Furnald, Walter H. Cobb and E. B. Souther were appointed a committee to arrange about a hall to meet in, and it was decided to invite Shalom encampment of Dorchester to work the Patriarchal degree; Boston of Boston the Golden Rule, and Massasoit of Boston the Royal Purple, it was also decided to hold a meeting of the Royal Purple and Scarlet members next Monday evening, when the subject of name and night of meeting will be decided.

The new encampment will probably be instituted about the middle of March.

District Court, Quincy.

Daniel F. Coakley of Milton, for assault on Bridget Flynn, was found guilty and sent to the House of Correction for sixty days. The evidence showed that Coakley was in the habit of drinking to excess, and in consequence was unable to do any work. He lived with Mrs. Flynn and made things there extremely unpleasant for that lady. Saturday morning he came down to breakfast at 8.30; words ensued, and Daniel hit his aunt on the head with the coffee pot. Thus the complaint and arrest.

Albert N. Perigo was arrested Sunday at North Weymouth, by Officer Furnald, on a complaint of keeping a liquor nuisance at the Pine Point House. Perigo was notified to appear in court some few days ago, but did not appear, and had succeeded in keeping out of the way until Sunday, when his whereabouts were learned by the officer, who locked him up. He was arraigned in court Monday, and his case continued until Tuesday morning. The evidence of several of the witnesses for the government was that they had purchased liquor by the glass and in quantity on several occasions. The defence was neither denial or acknowledgment. The defendant took the stand and related a long story of his trials and tribulations since he had been at this well-known hotel. He told of the education he had received in the public schools of Weymouth, and the part his father had taken in the late rebellion. He also claimed he was a near neighbor of His Honor, and if he must serve a sentence he wanted him to consider first offence and his unintentional wrong and in closing he said in passing a condemnation of the Pine Point property he reduced the value more than a thousand dollars.

His Honor heard Perigo patiently and the clerk read the judgment, which was a fine of $90, in default he was committed.

Joseph M. Ion of Quincy was arraigned for being drunk, and his case was continued for two weeks to see how he behaves himself.

Walter Darling of Randolph, drunk, $8

John McGonagal of Randolph, drunk, $8.

The case of Thomas Sullivan of East Weymouth for a single sale came up for hearing. Found not guilty and discharged.

Eugene Lawrence of Randolph, drunk, $9.

William E. Roberts of Weymouth, drunk, $7.

Henry Gilligan of Weymouth was arraigned for assault upon Mrs. Mary H. Perry and the case was continued until Friday morning for hearing.

Patrick McAhear of Quincy, drunk, $8. Committed.

The case of Henry Gilligan of Weymouth for assault on Mrs. Mary A. Perry came up for hearing and was continued until Tuesday.

Dennis Moynihan for assault on Mrs. Isaac Tirrell of South Weymouth, was fined $10; in default committed. In this case it seems that Moynihan who hails from Rockland, was passing the house when Mrs. Tirrell, who is at times not in her right mind called him in and he mistaking her purpose attempted an assault. Her cries were heard by Mr. Loring Tirrell who rushed to the rescue and had the man arrested.

John J. Ford for assault on James Coburn was held in $200 for his appearance Saturday morning.

John J. Ford for bastardy preferred by Mary E. Anstey was held in $300 for his appearance Saturday morning.

John J. Ford for breaking and entering the stores of Edward Russell and W. H. Doble was held in $1,000 for his appearance Saturday morning.

William J. Keegan for breaking and entering stores of Edward Russell and W. H. Doble, was held in $1,000 for his appearance Saturday morning. As Ford and Keegan being unable to procure the required bonds, were committed.

THE RECOMMENDATION of the Mayor, seconded by the Committee on Public Buildings, relative to the insurance of school buildings is one of doubtful expediency. The principle of insurance is a good one and where a person or firm has all his belongings or wealth under one roof he certainly should carry a good insurance. But where a person owns a large number of houses, widely, scattered, he can constitute himself a small insurance company, and save money by not insuring.

So with the city. We claim it has made money by not insuring. Its loss has been trifling compared with the cost of insurance. In its history of 99 years we believe it has lost but two schoolhouses the one in 1815 and the Willard in 1889, and these were valued at less than $25,000, an average loss of $250 per year. Perhaps we have been fortunate, but figure if you will a loss twice as large.

A BILL reported by the Legislative committee on Election Laws Tuesday, will, if adopted, avoid much confusion. It fixes 5 P. M. as the legal end of a day for filing nominations; and also provides, in reckoning the number of days mentioned in all laws of the Commonwealth relating to elections, Sundays and holidays shall be included, provided, however, that, if the final day mentioned shall fall on Sunday or a holiday, the first day previous to such day or days shall be considered the final day if the period of time precedes a certain day, act or event; and the first day following such day or days shall be considered the final day if the period of time follows a certain day, act or event.

THE LAW limiting the amount which a city can raise by taxation is felt in other cities as well as in Quincy, and in some perhaps it works more of a hardship than in this city. Gloucester, for instance, a city incorporated in 1873, whose population is about 22,000, is lamenting because but 160,825 can be raised this year. The amount asked for was $193,415. Last year $153,636 was appropriated, the receipts were $30,391.43, and the amount expended $202,957.48.

The Gloucester Times comments editorially as follows:

The same problem that has stared the city government in the face for the past two years, how to lop off, not luxuries but actual necessities, to bring the appropriations within the amount established by law, is again encountered. How difficult a problem it is shown by the fact that the estimates of the several departments had to be pruned to the extent of nearly $33,000 to reduce them to the amount allowed by law, and even then it was found necessary to resort to such expedients as taking the dog tax and public library fund to buy school books and supplies, and appropriate for some purposes a considerable less amount than the already ascertained sum which must be expended.

Until Gloucester is a considerable richer city than she is today, it will be impossible to conduct her affairs in a satisfactory manner within the $12 limit for city purposes. In order to comply with the law she must either increase the debt to the amount allowed by the statutes, and then ask for an extension, or neglect important interests. The Legislature places the power of expenditure in various hands—more, makes expenditure in numerous directions compulsory—and then takes out of the hands of those upon whom it has placed the responsibility of meeting those expenditures the power to raise sufficient money to meet them. Such a law may be constitutional, but it is neither consistent nor wise.—Gloucester Times.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 18, 1891.

Each branch of the legislature chose a committee to attend the funeral of the late Chief Justice Morton. The House adjourned on Wednesday as a token of respect to the honored deceased, but unfortunately for the honor intended, the motion was not made till all the business was ended and there was nothing to do but to adjourn.

Mrs. Lucy Stone, Julia Ward Howe, T. W. Higginson, William Lloyd Garrison, Mary A. Livermore, Susan S. Fessenden and H. B. Blackwell, all of them noted woman suffrage agitators, have petitioned the House for the use of Representatives' hall in which to present their arguments to the members as a whole. They say that they have for years made their arguments to the committee, who have reported a bill, but that when it has gone into the House before the members who have not heard their arguments, the bill has always been defeated. Hence, if all can hear them, the bill will probably pass. But the argument is hardly plausible. Col. Higginson knows, and every other petitioner ought to know, that by courtesy and custom the committee is made up favorably to the suffragists. Hence they always get their bill. But the House is made up by the people and reflects their sentiments. The woman suffrage hearing has been given this year and closed, but the House has voted to give the use of the hall.

On Friday afternoon Gov. Russell sent to the Senate a copy of the apportionment act which passed Congress Feb. 7, 1891. It is sealed with the great seal of the United States Department of State and bears the signature of James G. Blaine to attest that it is a correct copy of the original which is on file at Washington. Under this law Massachusetts will have thirteen representatives in the national house of representatives, instead of twelve as at present, and the vital question here is whether the reapportionment shall be made this year or next year. Corresponding reapportionments were made in 1862, 1872 and 1882 and that precedent is in favor of putting the matter over until next year. It is thought that the Republicans will favor this, taking their chances of having the governor and both branches of the legislature, as usual. On the other hand, Gov. Russell has recommended action this year, as the parties are so divided as to insure a practically fair division of the State. That is, the Democrats have the governor, the Republicans have the House and neither party the Senate. The matter was laid on the table.

Gov. Russell also sent in an invitation from the State of Vermont for Massachusetts to join Vermont and New Hampshire Aug. 16, next, in celebrating the 100th anniversary of the admission of Vermont to the Union and in the dedication of the Bennington monument at Bennington.

After the popular and successful Australian ballot comes another new thing from Australia—the Torrens' or Australian system of registering land titles. The name "Torrens" is that of the founder of the system. Attention has been called to it recently. The Boston executive business association has approved it and on Tuesday Gov. Russell sent to the legislature a special message describing at length the advantages of the system and recommending the appointment of a commission to examine the matter, including what changes in our present laws would be necessary, and to report to the next Legislature.

For this new system advantages are claimed which seem fabulous beside our present system of registration of deeds. The recording is by a certificate and on that certificate is a statement of whatever incumbrance is on the property. The government guarantees the title and defends it to the holder against all the world. Transfers of real estate would be as simple as transfers of stocks. Money could be raised upon the certificate as easily as upon stock certificates. All the expense, delay and uncertainty of searching titles would be removed. The cost would not be heaviest proportionately upon the holders of small estates, as is now the case, and, indeed, the cost would be vastly reduced all around. No one need try the system unless he chooses.

These and other advantages, in contrast with our present bulky and expensive system, are set forth at length by the Governor, and he adds the following concerning the history of the system: "The Torrens system of registration of title was an adaptation to land of a system of registration of title to shipping. It was established in the colony of South Australia in the year 1856. It has since been adopted in the other Australian colonies, in New Zealand, British Columbia and in the city of Toronto in a modified form; it was established in part in Ireland soon after the year 1863, and as the result of a long agitation in Engand a bill embodying it was brought forward as a government measure at the last session of parliament. Systems of dealing with land which give like facilities to transfer have long existed in some of the continental countries of Europe. The successful use of the Torrens' system for nearly a generation in Australia, its introduction into other English possessions, all deriving their systems of law from the same source as ourselves, show that it can be easily adapted to our circumstances." As to expense he says: "In New Zealand, for the year ending June 30, 1879, the average cost of each of 17,422 registrations of sales and mortgages, covering property to the value of nearly $38,000,000, was only $5.50." The new system seems to have great prestige, just as the Australian ballot did. It may be adopted here as quickly.

Decisive action was taken in the senate on Wednesday, on the constitutional amendments relating to biennial elections and the poll tax. Each was passed its final stage before sending to the house—the former by 23 to 16 and the latter by 33 to 6. Two Republicans voted against biennials and six Democrats for them and six Republicans (Clark of Franklin, Low of Essex, Pinkerton of Worcester, Smith of Worcester, Southwick of Essex and Wyer of Middlesex) against the poll tax amendment. The vote on biennials was as follows:

YEAS: Alden, Bennett, Brickett, Cady, Carpenter, Champlin, Clark, Fernald, Gilman, Kimball, Low, Pinkerton, Raymond, Risteer, Rotch, Savage, Simpkins, Smith, Southwick, Stepford, Towle, West, Wyer—23.

NAYS: Bradley, Breed, Cooke, Coveney, Donovan, Drury, Eaton, Haggerty, Howard Kemp, McDonald, McNary, Nutter, Provin, Reade, Thayer—16.

The Osborne investigation in the Green room is wholly outside of the Legislature. Mayor Matthews of Boston presented charges to the governor and council against Police Commissioner Osborne of Boston (the commissioners being appointed by the governor) and Lieutenant Governor Haile presides at the round table. Mayor Matthews charges were very serious and the question is, whether he will be able to substantiate them.

Joseph W. Robertson.

The death of Mr. Joseph W. Robertson took place Thursday and was not wholly unexpected as the gentleman had been in feeble health for some months. He was in his 78th year, being born in Thornton, N. H., in 1813.

He has been a prominent figure in Quincy particularly under the town form of government. As early as 1845 he was elected a Selectmen, Assessor, Surveyor of Highways and Overseer of the Poor, and was at the time of his death the oldest ex-Selectman. He held the office at least six years, the last year being 1872. He had also filled the office of School Committee and Representative to the General Court.

Mr. Roberton was among the wealthiest citizens. The Assessors of 1890 valued his property at about $125,000 making his tax $1,550.36, but his actual wealth was probably half a million, as he held many mortgages. He was the owner of the first brick business block built in Quincy, the Robertson block opposite the LEDGER office, in which is located the Robertson House, National Granite bank, stores, a public hall and Masonic headquarters. His estate on Adams street was one of the best farms in this vicinity.

The deceased was one of the largest stockholders in the Mt. Wollaston National Bank, and the National Granite Bank, being a director of the former; and also a corporator of the Quincy Savings Bank.

He was also one of the corporators of the new City Hospital, Vice President of the Board of Trustees, and recently contributed $5000 to the endowment fund.

He was a member of Rural Lodge of Masons, and one of its Trustees, and also was a Knight Templar. He was an ancient Odd Fellow, being a member of the old Mt. Wollaston Lodge.

Some years ago Mr. Robertson was a very prominent member of the First Universalist Society, and one of the pillars of the church.

Mrs. Robertson died several years ago. The deceased leaves no children. He had, however, nephews and nieces.

His funeral will probably be held Sunday.

Quincy Births for 1890.

The number of births recorded in this city during the year 1890 was 550, a decrease of thirty-six over the preceding year. Of the total number 291 were males and 253 females and six the sex was not given. The banner months for births were May, August and December; fifty-one being born in each of these months, and the smallest number was thirty-five, which occurred in February. December 10, Mrs. Bridget Roache presented her liege lord with triplets, while eight other ladies presented their hubbies with twins. Below will be found the summary by months for the past five years:

A $100 POST OFFICE.

James D. Taber, proprietor of the Linden House at Houghs Neck, has forwarded a petition to Washington to be appointed postmaster at Houghs Neck. Among the signers are Mayor Fairbanks, ex-Representative Merrill, Theophilus King, Henry H. Faxon and others. The petition was circulated quietly and very few knew of the movement.

The present incumbent is Capt. Boyd, of West Quincy, who has filled the position two summers. The revenue of the office is very small, not over $100, and is hardly worth much of an effort.

Banjo Soloist.

The following notice of our townsman we find in the Winchester Star:

"Particular mention may be made of the banjo playing of Frank T. Bassick, last Tuesday evening in the Town Hall. This gentleman showed himself to be a thorough master of the instrument and delighted the large audience by his artistic performances."

—Dedham spent $38,305.18 for schools in 1890. Some of the other expenditures were: $19,637.81 for roads, $3,261.39 for fire department, $6,773.39 for poor, $2,650 for police, $5,520.27 for street lighting.

—Wrentham made the largest shipment of straw hats the other day which has ever been made from that town, which shows some one has faith in a coming summer.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy." W. B. ATHERTON, Passaic City, N. J.

Shall Not Pass This Way Again.

BY ELIZA M. HICKOK

"Whence came and whither bound are we
Holds something still of mystery;
But one brave thought is clear and plain.
We shall not pass this way again.

Why waste an hour in vain regret,
For common ills that must be met?
Why of the thorny road complain?
We shall not pass this way again.

Why wound, or cause a tear to start?
Why vex or trouble one poor heart?
Each hath its secret grief or care,
Its burden that thou canst not bear.

The years glide by; stand strong and true,
The good thou canst, oh, quickly do!
Let gentle words soothe woe and pain,
We shall not pass this way again.

Household Receipts.

POTATOES CREAMED. For two cupfuls of potatoes (cold boiled), heat in a double boiler one cupful of milk, thickened with a tablespoonful of butter rolled in flour. Season with salt and pepper. Into this stir the potatoes, cut into dice, letting them remain on the fire just long enough to become smoking hot throughout. When well heated turn into a well greased baking dish, cover with buttered crumbs and brown in a quick oven. If parsley is liked, cut some fine and stir into the milk with the potatoes.

BAKED BATTER PUDDING. Allow a pint of milk, four tablespoonfuls of flour, two eggs and a little salt. Stir the flour smooth in a part of the milk, then put in the eggs without first beating and beat them well with the mixed flour. Then add the remainder of the milk and the salt and when well stirred together pour it into a buttered dish and bake it half an hour. When it is done the whole top will have risen up, for so long as there is a sunken spot in the centre it is not baked enough. This makes a pudding for four or five persons. It will not be light unless put into the oven immediately on being made. Serve with a liquid sauce.

PUDDING SAUCE. To three large tablespoonfuls of nice brown sugar, put a large tablespoonful of butter and half a one of flour; stir all together in a bowl until white, then add a gill of boiling water and stir until all is melted, then set it on the stove just long enough to boil up. Add rose-water, a few drops of lemon juice, or a little extract of vanilla.

HASHED BEEF OR MUTTON. Cut the meat in very thin slices and flour both sides; put it in a deep dish, add thinly sliced raw potatoes in alternate layers and sprinkle each layer with salt and pepper. When the meat and potatoes are all laid in the dish, put an onion in the centre, cut in quarters and stick one clove in each quarter. Pour over the whole some gravy or water thickened with flour to which a piece of butter has been added. Cover close with an old plate and bake slowly two hours.

Anecdotes.

"Mamma (grimly)—"Never mind, my dear. But I can tell you this, that it is not a water-color.

Wife—What makes woolen goods so dear? Is it the McKinley act?

Husband—No they were always expensive because wool is scarce.

Wife—Why is wool so scarce?

Husband—Because they kill off the sheep for mutton. The shepherds in ancient times kept their sheep and became rich from the sale of the wool. The farmers now sell their sheep and lambs cheap for slaughter and become poor, and then blame the lawmakers.

The Hingham Journal says: Charles Conant, the Whitman blacksmith is continuing a novel experiment begun a little more than twelve years ago. On the occasion of the birth of his son he agreed to give the youngster a start in life by placing the money received from the letting of a certain horse in his livery stable to the lad's credit. The proceeds with interest have now reached the handsome sum of $3,650, not including the cost of the boy's clothing and keeping of the horse the past eight years. The animal is sixteen years old, kind and gentle, and still in active service. That horse deserves a pension.

☞ The robins have appeared near Duxbury and at other points along the South shore, and the farmers are sure that mild weather is to be the order of things the rest of the season, because within the memory of man these birds have never been know to make a mistake.

New York Fashions.

TABLE LINEN.

The newest table linen is woven in orchid or chrysanthemum patterns which are sometimes arranged in broad columns that run lengthwise, this being likewise most stylish for conservative designs. But all over patterns of course have a showing, since fashions do not change so rapidly in household matters as in dress. Hemstitching is the favorite finish for high grade damask but particularly for tea cloths which beginning from three-quarters of a yard square, become larger, yet not very much so, since for fashionable five o'clock teas, all appurtenances are usually placed on one or more small tables, from whence the refreshing beverage with light eatables are distributed to guests.

TEA CLOTHS

therefore are special exponents of tasteful handiwork executed on fine linen in linen thread either white or colored and here in particular, ladies employ their leisure either in parlors or on summer hotel piazzas. But linen shops are supplied with great varieties. The costliest tea cloths are decorated in Fayal work and this may be imitated at home, by drawing threads for the space of an inch or two and filling in with fine embroidery thread in floral figures. A fringe of threads gives finish on the edges and the cross threads are kept firm by embroidered scallops. The work is always white and the genuine are imported from the Azore Islands with corresponding expense. Long scarfs are shown for luncheons with large squares of linen worked to match, which are placed under plates, finger bowl doilies and napkins being also in keeping.

NEW SILVER WARE

shows chrysanthemum patterns done in applied work, although there is a large demand for repousse work, while rich specimens show the two styles in combination. For the gratification of very wealthy purchasers, laminated work, the result of five metals beaten together, is displayed in leading establishments and sometimes the attractions of colored enamel are added to applied or repousse work, particularly in loving cups which from their size give room for ornament.

NOTES AND ANSWERS.

"Mrs. R." The faces and dresses of the little men and women in cream, that have been so fashionable this winter, are painted by trained workmen who use chocolate for shading, strawberry for pink or pistache for green. Burnett's extracts are in highest esteem for flavoring, because so pure and delicate while most economical, because of such strength.

Embroidering in silk on kid or chamois is now fashionable and various small articles such as pen wipers, needle books, pocket pincushions or photograph frames are thus made pretty.

"Ellen Y." Brocaded silk is much used for covering boxes or photograph frames and also for making sachets, the designs outlined by thread or minute spangles of gilt or silver. LUCY CARTER.

The latest scheme to raise money for municipal government in France is to tax the church bells.

At Rawil-Pindie, India, there was recently a "locust block" on the railway line which lasted several hours, and so lubricated the track that for two or three days afterward extra engines were required to draw the trains over the sections affected.

The "manna" which fell from the sky in Asia Minor last August, and was baked into bread, has recently been examined by men of science, and is identified as a lichen belonging to the family Lecanora esculenta.

The highest church-spire in the world has just been completed. It is that of the cathedral at Olm, Wurtemberg, and is 530 feet high.

In the preceding chapters the effects of alcohol upon those organs of the body directly concerned in digestion, nutrition, respiration, circulation, secretion, and the purification of the blood, were discussed. These all are important organs and the functions they perform are indispensible. When these organs are diseased—when they are lowered in their vitality and degenerated in their structure, in the manner that alcohol tends to affect them, the whole system suffers, but this is primarily and chiefly physical; the mind—the most important part of the man—the feelings, impulses, and purposes, mental and moral, the intelligence, the knowing and reasoning faculties, and the governing will are by the impressions upon these organs, affected only secondarily and remotely. We come now to consider the action of the narcotics on the brain and nervous system, and especially that of alcohol where its most characteristic effects are produced. The nervous system, of which the brain is the chief or crowning part, but which includes the spinal cord and the nerves, is regarded by all physiologists as the central and most important part of the organism. It is the most important part for different reasons. It establishes connections and relations and maintains a harmony between the different parts of the body, and none of its actions are independent of the brain and nerves.

For the fourth and last week, beginning Monday March 2: Monday and Tuesday evenings and Wednesday matinee, "The Iron Master;" Wednesday evening and Saturday matinee, "Queen's Shilling;" Thursday and Friday evenings, "It was a Dream," and "The Money Spinner;" to close Saturday evening with the "Iron Master." The sale of seats for the entire two weeks has already begun at the box office and tickets are in great demand.

Boston Museum.

We are sorry to announce that next week is the last of "The Solicitor," and that charming little piece "Betty's Finish." For many weeks these laughable comedies have attracted crowds who have filled the theatre to its uttermost capacity. A special matinee performance is announced for Monday afternoon in celebration of Washington's birthday, and there will be the usual performances for the remainder of the week. All who have not yet seen these comedies, should make an extra effort next week for it will well repay them.

Tremont.

Washington's birthday will be celebrated at the Tremont, Monday, "The Deacon's Daughter" being presented afternoon and evening. The remainder of the week Miss Pixley will appear in her new play "Kate, A Romance of the War."

Boston.

Commencing Monday afternoon, Feb. 23, and continuing through the week, Rich & Harris' Howard Athenæum Specialty Company, will be the attraction at the Boston theatre.

Globe.

Dixey closes his engagement today giving his farewell performances this afternoon and evening in "Adonis." Next week Lydia Thompson is announced to appear in "The Dazzler."

The Grave of a Little Child.

There's a spot on the hillside far away,
Where in summer the grass grows green;
Where, beneath a rustling elm tree's shade,
A moss-covered stone is seen.
'Tis a quiet and unfrequented spot,
A solitude long and wild;
Yet somebody's hopes are buried there—
'Tis the grave of a little child.

In winter, alas! that mossy stone
Is hid 'neath a shroud of snow,
But around it in springtime, fresh and sweet,
The daisies and violets grow,
And o'er it the summer breezes blow
With a fragrance soft and mild,
And the autumn's dead leaves thickly strew
That grave of a little child.

And every year there's a redbreast comes
When the month of May is nigh,
And builds her nest in this quiet spot
'Mid the elm tree's branches high;
With her melody sweet by the hour she trills
As if by the scene beguiled:
Perhaps, who knows? 'tis an angel comes
To the grave of that little child.

Yes, somebody's hopes lie buried there;
Some mother is weeping in vain,
For though years may come and years may go,
'Twill never come back again.
Yes, blessed are those who die in youth,
The pure and the undefiled,
Some roads to heaven perhaps run through
That grave of a little child.

—Sunshine.

Miscellany.

Dr. Pullholler's Wooing.

Poverty, to a sensitive mind, is like a chain to a sensitive dog's leg. It takes away a man's better feelings; he drops his disguise as an angel—if he wore one; it makes him worse than ill-natured. When he talks, instead of talking as if his words had been first sent through the rose water of prosperity, they come out of him as a dog which is in a hole, and after a rat, comes upon being pulled out of the hole by the tail—snarling and growling; he is malicious, vindictive and ready to do any desperate deed. Poverty had thrown Dr. Pullholler into these conditions, and, being in a desperate frame of mind, he determined to marry. His first thought was of suicide, but seeing how cowardly it is, when you become your own enemy, to kill yourself without giving yourself a chance to fight back, he determined that marriage was the most courageous and manly revenge on himself, and adopted it instead. We are, in saying this, reflecting the views of Dr. Pullholler; for if the views of the mere scribe were given he would say that to him marriage appears in the light of the most blessed of states, and that he would gladly resign all of his worldly possessions, and all of his hopes of future contingencies, limited or unlimited, for the privilege of getting married.

Dr. Pullholler had started dentist studios in several parts of the city, and with patience waited for patients at each "studio," until creditors were no longer to be pacified by mere offers to pull their teeth free of charge and he had to move. The same offer was made to the people who took up his carpets from under him, which he had agreed to purchase on the installment plan.

He had fitted up his fourth office and was on the eve of having his fourth carpet taken up from under him, and already he saw himself in imagination, like Marius amid the ruins of Carthage, in his office, surrounded by scraps of old paper, the carpet being gone and dust being in the air, while the sunlight sent its beams through it with anything but a cheerful gleam. In consequence of this fact, as was said previously, he felt utterly desperate, remorseless, vindictive and heartless. He looked at the gleaming weapons of his dental inquisition and he wished that he only had the whole world at hand to torture. It is in such moments and in such ideas that we find relief from our worst afflictions. It is in such ideas that we find the disguised dawn which peeps in rapturous colors above the horizon of our long night of misfortune.

He had for months been making love to Miss McTusk, a rich coquette of thirty-five, who had made his poverty more unbearable by casting him over and over again, and all in a moment, from the highest heaven of hope down to the lowest deep of all the depths of darkness. He might have made others suffer when seated on the plush colored throne in his office; but, as a coquette, she had given many a wrench and twist to his feelings which made him suffer more. This lady had, in the days when he was well enough off to indulge in objections, what seemed to him a very objectionable poll parrot nose and a habit, which was displeasing to Dr. Pullholler, of dressing in a green silk bonnet and a green silk dress of vivid poll parrot hue. Her eyes were of that light blue color which makes the glass eyes of wax dolls so attractive in appearance. But in his present condition nothing was objectionable to him but the one characteristic from which the lady was happily free, and that was the only weak point which he saw in himself. It was poverty.

He had spoken to her about a black spot on her front tooth; had described the awful consequences of leaving it alone; and had told her how much would be added to her personal appearance if it was removed; and had told her, besides, how much he would feel honored if she would pick him out of the "madding crowd" of dentists as the man to remove it. But all people are suspicious of men in his profession, and notwithstanding his past ardent protestations of love, the lady was so cruel as to mistrust him when he assured her that the sensation produced in banishing the slight discoloration, so far from being painful, would be highly soothing and as enjoyable as an entertainment given for that special purpose. She had at last consented to grant the favor for which he had so earnestly pleaded, intending thus in her coquettish way to raise his hopes high, in order to have the pleasure of dashing them low to the earth again.

As a new idea now occurred to him in relation to the tooth, he called on her, and urged her to come to his office at once, as he had a preparation, whose properties would be lost by time, and he wanted to use it before any of its properties were lost by evaporation. An ardent lover who is persistent will make an impression even upon a coquette. Besides having love to inspire him Dr. Pullholler had poverty to put spurs—and very sharp ones—to the heels of his argument. He was thus impelled by the two most powerful forces which operate on the human mind in combination. The result was that his lady love, with a simper, consented, and he had the pleasure of escorting her to his office.

After considerable giggling and pouting, Miss McTusk took her seat in the chair, made "sheep's eyes" at him; gave her head a coquettish toss and waited for the doctor to come forward with his soothing appliances. It was not long before he came forward, and when she saw on his face the look of resolve, superinduced by poverty, and in his hand the deadly instrument of torture with a steel glitter on it, as deadly as the gleam in the eye of the cobra, she ceased to giggle and pout and gave a heart-rending shriek of terror.

"Be calm!" said Dr. Pullholler, as he played a "tattoo" on each successive tooth with his instrument.

"But," said the coquette, after he had withdrawn his instrument, "you are only going to remove the speck on the outside of the front tooth!"

"You never know," said the doctor, "what a dentist is going to do after you get into his chair, until he has done it," and he fumbled among his instruments until he found the one capable of doing the greatest execution. Hardly had it been found when it was drumming away and skipping and hopping from tooth to tooth.

She was just wandering how things were going to terminate when it hopped out of her mouth, bearing a tooth with it. The doctor waved it in triumph in the air, while the lady shrieked an accompaniment.

"You know that, with my love for you, I wouldn't hurt you," he said.

"You did hurt me and you don't love me!" said the lady with streaming and flashing eyes.

"I do love you," said the doctor reproachfully. "So much so, that if you will accept me as your husband, I will be your devoted slave for life."

"Never!" said the lady. "If you treat me this way now, what wouldn't you do if you were married?"

"It is all for your own good, and only because of my abundant love for you," said the doctor, as he begun to fumble among his instruments again.

"What are you doing now?" asked Miss McTusk with a look of terror.

"Don't be alarmed," said her companion. "It is with the tenderest feelings that I shall touch you, so I won't hurt you. With my love for you I couldn't although you are so cruel as to scorn me."

"But I don't," said the coquette.

"Do you love me, as in the past you have said that you did?" asked the doctor.

"More!" shrieked the lady, as a new instrument, twisted like a serpent ready to strike, raised his glittering head above the horizon of her vision.

"Will you be mine?" asked Dr. Pullholler.

"I'll think about it," said Miss McTusk.

"Think quick," said the doctor, as his instrument prepared to strike.

"I do!" said the lady, drawing back with a shudder.

"Do what?" said the doctor. "Will you be my wife?"

The lady hesitated. The instrument approached.

"I will!" she shrieked.

"Now?" said the doctor.

"Whenever you like!" she screamed.

"Sign that! said Dr. Pullholler, handing her a paper stained with blood. It was a contract of marriage. He placed a pen in her hand and she signed it.

"We are now husband and wife under the laws of the state," said Dr. Pullholler; "and, as my wife, it is your duty to love, fear and obey me; and as my wife, I order you to come to church with me and get married."

After the pecular manner in which she had been wooed and won, the lady was in no frame of mind to resist; and the doctor, with his poverty staring him in the face, was in no frame of mind to meet with a defeat. The lady saw this and obeyed him; and going to the vestry of a neighboring church, the minister who was found there made them man and wife.

Dr. Pullholler at once opened large offices, advertised his business in the papers extensively, employed assistants, has now a large practice, and when his carpets are down they stay. He is rolling in wealth, and his wife has come to look upon him as the apple of her eye.—Ploughman.

Wanted Another Ticket.

A Cambridge gentleman was asked to buy a ticket to the fireman's ball, says a correspondent of the Providence Journal, and good-naturedly complied. The next question was what to do with it. One of his two servants would probably be glad to use it, but he did not wish to show favoritism. Then it occurred to him that he might buy another ticket and give both of his servants a pleasure.

Not knowing just how to proceed, he inquired of a policeman where the tickets were to be had. "Why don't you go down to the engine house?" said the officer. "The men all know you."

So the old gentleman went to the engine house, but when he entered there was no one in sight. He had never been in such a place before, but was perfectly familiar with the use of electric signals. On the side of the room was a button, evidently connected with a bell, and naturally enough, after waiting a minute or two, he put his thumb upon it.

The effect was electrical in every sense of the word. From the air overhead—so, at least, it seemed to the old gentleman in his bewilderment—men began to rain down, completing their toilets as they fell. The horses rushed out of their stalls, and in a word, all the machinery of a modern engine house was instantly in motion.

Amid all this turmoil stood the mild-mannered and innocent old gentleman, who, even now, did not suspect that he had touched the fire alarm. The men rushed upon him for information as to the whereabouts of the fire, but when he opened his mouth it was only to say, in the mildest accents:—

"I should like to buy another ticket to the ball, if you please."

The situation was so ludicrous that no one could be angry, not even the men whose nap had been broken into, and the old gentleman bought his ticket and departed in peace.

National Sailors' Home.

Recently in the PATRIOT a writer mixes up strawberries, milk routes, agriculture and ice in an endeavor to show the fitness of Dr. Faxon for the position he holds as superintendent of the National Sailors' Home. As to Mr. Faxon's capabilities as an agriculturist the public have already been informed, but has the writer ever been present during the harvesting of ice at this place? Had he visited the ice-houses a few weeks ago, when they were being filled with ice, he would have seen a number of inmates illy fitted for that cold and laborious work; some of them victims of heart disease and other ailments, and two of them verging close onto 70 years of age. But then it cost nothing except to tax the waning strength of the men.

We have shown, Mr. Editor, how Jack Tar has had to pay tribute from his pension money for the luxuries (?) (not including strawberries) he here enjoys. Now I will show again where his services are utilized to their fullest extent by the superintendent, often seemingly regardless of the strength of the man and the work he is ordered to perform. Although there are four farmers employed here now, one of the inmates has to feed and otherwise care for ten cows, while two more inmates are constantly employed in the laundry and another inmate has to attend to the greenhouse and the hot water boilers therein. This greenhouse, which was built some five years ago, costing some six or seven hundred dollars, is like the dyke—another extravagant and costly parasite on the funds of this Home. Its purpose is strictly horticultural—to raise flowers for the use of the superintendent's family, and a bouquet in the chapel on Sunday. Nearly five tons of coal has been consumed there this winter.

There is still another man whose long hours and onerous work should not be overlooked and that is the inmate who has charge of the boiler in the basement used in heating the building. He commences work at 4 o'clock in the morning and it is 8 o'clock in the evening, and in cold weather sometimes later, before his duties end. To use a phrase, this appears to us to be a dead wrong, that an inmate seventy years of age should be compelled to work sixteen hours each day in the dingy basement, and that without compensation. Whoever does that responsible work should receive wages or the time should be divided between two men. In past winters some of the inmates have had to pick straw to be made into mats. In the barn, the inmates who were so employed often tell of hours they suffered in severe weather with the cold, and one inmate, who is badly afflicted with paralysis and otherwise maimed for life, emphatically states it as his belief that the exposure to the cold drafts in the barn is the cause of his present afflictions.

Another man with a record of long service in the navy, and who was an inmate here for years, was some four months ago sent by the superintendent to work on his farm in Middleboro. After working there a month or more and receiving nothing but his board for his labor he returned to the Home, stating that the work was too hard for him, and on expressing an unwillingness to return he was shortly afterwards told by Dr. Faxon there was no further room for him and he was turned away from the Home, and that man is today an inmate of a poor house in Massachusetts.

We make no comment on this recital of facts but shall leave them for an intelligent and discerning public to pass judgment on. When they believe with us they will conclude that it is time that a radical, swift and sweeping change should be made in the management of this Home. There are many other disagreeable facts connected with the management of this Home, but they lay in a strata that can only be reached by a rigid investigation by the right parties who are looking for bottom facts.

We believe that it has been plainly shown the public that there has been an extravagant expenditure of funds, but not in the maintenance and comfort of the regular inmates, and we suggest that whoever investigates that they look into other branches of the management, where we feel confident they can readily find enough that needs reform and that will save many dollars to the funds of the Home. What we would consider a decided improvement, as the management have audited their own accounts and reported to themselves for the past twenty years, is for them hereafter to be required to publish their report to the public annually.

Enjoyed the Fun.

A dog in Plymouth loves coasting, and a reporter in the Memorial who saw him enjoying the sport with a number of boys, says, the coast was a smooth incline where the snow gave place to grass at the bottom, thus making a gradual stop possible. Doggy had a sled to himself, and at the word from his master hopped nimbly into place. A noose was put over his head and the sled started. The four-footed coaster sat as gravely as a judge on the seat as the sled gathered headway, and as it sped down the track he seemed to enjoy it as much as a boy. At the bottom he hopped off and ran eagerly up the hill, dragging the sled after him by the rope on his neck. He didn't seem to tire of the fun and was as ready to slide on the last trip as at the first. That "you can't teach an old dog new tricks" seems to be disproved in this case."

Old Book Terms.

The words folio, quarto, octavo, duodecimo and the like have almost, if not quite, lost their original meaning. At first they had reference only to the number of leaves into which the sheets used in making the books were folded. Thus, if these sheets were folded once, so as to form two leaves or four pages, the book was called a folio; if the sheets were folded twice, so as to form four leaves, the book was called a quarto; if they were folded four times, so as to form eight leaves, the book was called an octavo, and so on.—Exchange.

Ye Soft Soap Days.

Time was when the hard wood ashes were stored away in barrels; when the household fat was saved, and in the spring out came a leach, and then began the making of the year's supply of soft soap. But now all this is changed, and when soap is needed, it is secured at the store, and "ten times out of nine," as Artemus Ward used to say, the order will go in for Brussels soap, for that is the best and most economical.

In 1866 the United States debt was $2,773,236,173.69. In 1892 the vast sum will be nearly or quite half paid off.

For the Patriot.

Bad Habits.

Habits, whether good or bad, are almost invariably acquired in early life. Hence if there is one duty more than another which parents owe to their children, it is to teach them to avoid the formation of habits which in after life may be not only the ource of regret but which may result in the loss of health, prosperity and happiness.

In the first place, it is the duty of parents to set a good example before their children; they should be sincere in every word or act, ever ready to give advice, and to take an active interest in all that pertains to the welfare and happiness of their children, always encouraging them to do what is right and warning them to avoid doing what is wrong,—in a word teach them to be honest, upright, pure-minded and true.

It cannot be denied that one of the worst habits is that of indulging in the intoxicating cup, but there are other habits nearly if not quite as bad which it is well to guard against. Not a few young men have been ruined through smoking the first cigar or playing the first game of cards. It may sound very well to say that there is no great harm in smoking or playing cards, but it is not safe to indulge in either of them. Strong drink, tobacco and cards all belong in the same category, and are so considered by right thinking people everywhere.

Keeping good habits is another matter about which the young should be careful. Of course no one possessing common-sense would expect young people to be otherwise than full of life; no sensible person would wish to prevent them from enjoying themselves to the fullest extent within reasonable bounds, but frequent attendance at parties and dances, at the expense of sufficient sleep, certainly cannot be beneficial to any one, more especially to those of tender age. The old adage,

> "Early to bed, early to rise,
> Makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise," is as true today as it ever was.

Young people who expect to be successful in life cannot afford to waste either time, energy or money. Sobriety, industry, perseverance and faithfulness to duty are the essentials of success in life, and whoever disregards these, lessens his chances of success. It is the duty of every one to make the most of the life which God has given him.

A Funny Problem.

A writer in the Examiner tells the following story: It was a warm, sleepy afternoon and the scholars in Miss Plummer's school looked and acted as if they wished 4 o'clock would come quickly.

The class in mental arithmetic were lazily droning through their lesson when Deacon Day popped his cherry face in at the door. All the children loved him and were glad when he came to visit the school.

Perhaps he saw they needed something to wake them up, so when the class was through with the lesson he gave them this problem:

"If eighteen cows were going through a narrow gate where only one could pass at a time, which cow could look back and say, 'There are eleven pairs of horns behind me.'"

The class thought busily for a minute, then up came Tommy Tuft's hand.

"Which one, Tommy?" asked the deacon.

"The seventh."

"No."

Another minute of study and, then Celia Brown put up her hand.

"What do you think, Celia?"

"I think it might be the eighth, for when the cow turned her head to look back her own horns would be behind her, wouldn't they?"

"No, it isn't the eighth," the deacon said. About the same time little Johnny Hartshorn on the front seat began to snicker.

"What are you laughing at Johnny?" asked Miss Plummer.

"Cows—can't—talk!" giggled Johnny.

Deacon Day laughed too, then.

"Johnny has answered it," he said. "None of the cows could do it of course."

Then all the scholars laughed, and woke up for the rest of the day, and Deacon Day bowed himself out.

The Attorney's Dog.

A Boston lawyer who resides in the suburbs is the owner of a dog that certainly possesses the instinct of an attorney. The other day he saw another dog carrying off a tempting looking bone. A second dog followed at a short distance. The lawyer's dog quickly conceived a plan of action worthy of an eminent legal mind. He immediately brought action against the dog with the bone. The third dog at once quickened his pace, and lost no time in instituting supplementary proceedings in his own behalf. This assistance proved equivalent to a decree for the plaintiff, for the lawyer's dog left the third dog to bear the brunt of the litigation, and seizing the bone fled to his own kennel, where possession was truly nine points of the law.—Boston Traveller.

Holidays for 1891.

The legal holidays of 1891 will fall on days of the week as follows; Washington's Birthday, February 22, Sunday; Memorial day, May 30, Saturday; Christmas, December 25, Friday; Labor day, September 7, Monday. Fast day and Thanksgiving day are to be fixed by appointment of the Governor. Good Friday of customary selection as Fast day in Connecticut, will be March 27. The last Thursday in November, usually named as Thanksgiving day will be the 26th of the month. St Valentine's day, Februaray 14, fell on a Saturday of 1891; St. Patrick's day, March 17, Tuesday; All Fool's day, April 1, Wednesday; May day, Friday; Ash Wednesday, February 11; Easter Sunday, March 26; Arbor day to be appointed by the Governor.—Mansfield News.

A HARMLESS STIMULANT. Perhaps the best stimulant for tired children, or for people of any age, is a cup of warm milk—not lukewarm, but hot. It is very nourishing, and, taken in spoonfuls, as it must be when hot, it is easy of digestion. The fashion of everlastingly sipping hot water is happily passing away, and, if hot milk will only take its place, it will more than fill it, since hot water taken in such a way is injurious to the digestion, while hot milk is nourishing as well as stimulating. Many a man takes a drink when he comes in "tired to death" simply because he wants something to reach the faint, weary, empty feeling in the stomach.

Bismarck says of Brussels: "Mit dot soap I can vash mysellu f mit von hand und chew a pretzel mit der udder von."

The Cross Mother.

At no time in her busy days is an intelligent mother so apt to fold the arms and close the eyes of maternal justice as when she is cross—simply and undoubtedly cross. This crossness is chiefly caused by fatigue—weariness of mind and body, and sometimes of soul. With tired nerves and weary body, she cannot endure the common demands made upon her, and ill-temper follows. She sows bitter feelings and repels loving attentions with her irritable hasty words. Broadly speaking, no mother has any right to get so tired. She cannot afford it. It takes too much out of her life, and too much out of her children's life. Such a condition can more frequently be prevented than is generally believed.

The careless or shallow woman says: "I was overworked. It made me cross," and she considers that admission the sufficient reason and excuse for any amount of similar indulgence. The religious or sympathetic woman worries over it, prays over it, sheds bitter tears—and then the trouble repeats itself. The remedy lies near at hand. Let a mother find out what makes her cross, and then let her avoid the cause if possible. If social pleasures weary her, let them be decidedly lessened. If there is too much sewing, too much cooking, or too many household cares, lessen them. If economical effects cause the severest strain, stop economizing at such a cost. This is the worst of wastes. Let the first economy be of that precious commodity, a mother's strength. Even the extent of one's religious and philanthropic work should be carefully examined, and if the trouble lies there, calmly and wisely dismiss some or all of it from the list of duties, for "what doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" It is surprising how easily seeming interests or needs can be spared without injury to the home life whenever the thoughtful woman seeks to find them, and surely one of the worst of household influences is mother's crossness.—Agnes B. Ormsbee in Harper's Bazar.

A Liberal Offer.

A clergyman was presented to a person living in the vicinity of Glasgow, who had a protuberance between his shoulders arising from a diseased spine and a corresponding protusion of the chest. The parishioners were opposed to a person of such an ungainly appearance occupying their pulpit. The presentee heard of the dissatisfaction, and being a personage of some humor and tact, convened a meeting of the malcontents, in order to hear their objections.

"I have have heard," said he, "that my settlement amongst you is not likely to be agreeable. Now, as I am not aware of any objection to my opinions or practice—my slender abilities for such a charge I admit—I should just like, as we are all friends and brethren, and have only one object to serve, that you would state your objections."

One glanced to another, which was as significantly returned almost around the vetoists, and silence prevailed for some time. "Speak out," said the presentee, "don't be afraid; I am not ready to take offence," when one stammered out, "Sir, you see! we—you see—sir—sin' I maun speak for my brethren here—dinna like your bodily appearance." "Neither do I," was the reply, "and if ye can get it repaired I'll be at half the expense mysel'."

Gifts for Invalids.

A very small thing of beauty that will be a pleasant sight for an invalid's eyes while it lasts is a carrot or sweet-potato hollowed out on the inside to leave a wall about three-quarters of an inch thick. The vegetable is suspended by cords passed through holes pierced in the sides, and the cavity filled with water. In a few days upturning sprays of green will sprout from the bottom and cover the outside, and if a small bunch of violets is put in the little quaint hanging basket, it will have a charming appearance.

A pretty little thing to leave on a sick friend's table is a plant saucer, with three pine cones standing upright in the centre. The arrangement of sticks or hair-pins, by which you compel them to assume and maintain an erect position may be concealed by a mat of real moss. There should also be a layer of sand in the bottom of the dish. Grain or grass seed should be scattered over the cones, and if the saucer is kept full of water, it will soon be a thing of beauty.—Harper's Bazar.

The Salary Problem.

"If any provide not for his own he is worse than an infidel," even if he neglects his family to make laws or to interpret them for his country. A man who is dependent upon what he earns, and who can earn $10,000 or $15,000 or $20,000 a year outside Congress, is going to think twice before he sacrifices that income for a salary on which he cannot have a home in the city where he must live more than half the time, and cannot give his children the education which he had planned for them. And if he thinks twice, the chances are greatly against his going to Washington, or tying himself down to an even smaller salary if he be a lawyer and the path opens for him to a seat in a Federal court.

The present system operates to fill Congress with men whose wealth is so great that the size of the salary is a matter of indifference. The tendency to elect to the Senate and House men who are rich, and who would never have been thought of for such office except for their riches, is already so strong as to be alarming, and yet the nation goes on year after year neglecting one perfectly obvious way to resist it. Make the salary of a congressman large enough for one to live as well at the close of the century as a Senator or a Representative lived at its beginning, and seats which now often go without a contest to unqualified millionaires will again be sought by men who are capable of rendering the best service to the State.—The Century for February.

—The Brockton correspondent of the Randolph Register writes: "Since our city adopted no-license more money has been saved, homes have been happier, and local trade has been better than ever before. We believe in prohibition, and will stick to it just as long as we can. There is such a determined effort to get licenses for druggists that it is hard to tell how soon the change may come. Our city is better off without license than with it."

Mr. Robertson's Will.

The will of Mr. J. W. Robertson was drawn by A. C. Clark, Esq., of Boston, who has been his legal adviser for many years, and is dated March 29, 1890, with a codicil dated Jan. 3, 1891.

The will creates a trust fund of $105,000 for the benefit of certain relatives therein named, makes bequests of $15,000 each to certain nieces and nephews and $2000 each to all grand-nieces and grand-nephews, and the codicil makes other bequests of $5000 each to certain nephews and nieces, provides for a burial lot and monument thereon, and makes certain relatives, as therein named, the residuary legatees. But few of the legatees are known in Quincy. There are no specific bequests of any part of his real estate.

Stereopticon Lecture.

Notwithstanding the stormy weather a good audience listened to a most enjoyable talk on Norway at Christ's church Parish house last Wednesday evening. Mr. Farwell is not a professional lecturer, and the off-hand manner in which he told of his trip made it all the more interesting. He showed over ninety slides mostly made by himself from photographs taken on the spot, from the North cape and the land of the midnight sun to Christiania the Capital. The journey took us through wonderful scenery; mountains, lakes and long arms of the sea called forda, then along the great post roads and among the homes of the people whose hardy ancestors have made the name Norseman world known. The picturesque costumes of the peasantry was unfortunately fast going out of use, and their quaint old churches preserved as relics were shown, while the personal experiences of the lecturer added additional interest and vividness.

The next lecture will be on Wednesday, March 4, at 7.45 P. M., and will be a trip through Switzerland by the Rev. Samuel Hodgkiss.

Surprise Party.

On Tuesday evening the 24th the friends of Mr. and Mrs. Daniel Flowers to the number of about 60 surprised them at their residence on Newcomb street. Dancing was indulged in, until about 11.30 P. M., when Mr. John N. Kelly in a few well chosen remarks presented them on behalf of the company with a beautiful parlor clock. Mr. Flowers though taken completely by surprise, thanked the donors in an appropriate speech. Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. Frank Flowers, Mr. and Mrs. John Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Oxford, Mr. and Mrs. John Emery, Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Carson, Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carson, Mr. and Mrs. John N. Kelley, Mr. and Mrs. Robert R. Smith, Mr. Alex. Emslie and lady, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Barnicoat, Mr. and Mrs. John Flowers, Mr. Frank Beattie, Mr. and Mrs. James Flowers, Mr. and Mrs. Angus McNeil, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. M. Smith, Master and Miss Smith, Mrs. Isabella and Miss Ida Cameron, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Farquharson, Mr. Mc Lellan and many others. The festivities were kept up until an early hour in the morning, when the guests separated with mutual good wishes, after having a highly enjoyable time.

The Suicide.

Those who read the report of an attempted suicide, in Wednesday's LEDGER, even though they were within a stone's throw of the Quincy Adams station all day, were probably ignorant of the circumstances, and in fact did not know anything of the kind had occurred.

Officer Langley was summoned about 2 P. M. by telephone but he had difficulty in locating the spot. He was first obliged to telephone back to find where the message was sent from, and on learning it was the office of the International Granite Co. he proceeded thither. There he learned that a man had twice got in front of a train, one of which a freight was obliged to stop.

The man then took to the woods on the east side of the track and travelled toward Braintree. No trace of him could be found; but it was later learned that he was a man who lives near the Braintree station and was returning from a spree in Boston.

City Band Election.

The City Band held its annual meeting Thursday evening and elected these officers:

President,—John C. Murray.
Vice-President,—John A. Welsh.
Secretary,—Alex. Raleigh.
Treasurer,—Charles C. Nash.
Leader,—Alex. Raleigh.

The report of the treasurer showed the income for the year 1890 to have been $803.86 and the expenditures $801.59. Mr. Frank L. Collins, who is one of the best instructors in the State, has been retained for another year. The band under his instruction has made rapid strides towards perfection and today is second to none of the amateur bands in the State. They have in their ranks some excellent cornet, clarinet, piccolo and baritone soloists and the citizens will be treated to some fine concerts by the band and it is hoped they will receive the financial support they deserve.

The Unknown.

The Overseer of the Poor of Quincy has received a letter from the Boston poor department, instructing them to bury at their expense the body of the man found dead at South Quincy, Tuesday, Feb. 13, who is undoubtedly Richard Barry of Boston. Since receiving the above Undertaker Hall has received a telephone from Boston, saying friends of the unfortunate man would visit this city Friday to identify the body.

Old Sailors' Entertainment.

A fine entertainment which greatly amused the inmates at the National Sailors' Home was given at 3 P. M. Monday, as is customary on Washington's birthday. Dr. Faxon, the superintendent, spoke of George Washington. He was followed by Rev. D. M. Wilson, the chaplain. There were also cornet and piano solos, vocal solos and duetts, and a comedy act by a very clever young man. The exercises were held in the dining room, which was decorated with flags.

A Coming Mayor.

City Messenger Tirrell and wife have adopted the suggestion of the DAILY LEDGER and named their first born "Porter Fairbanks Tirrell." It sounds well and being in honor of the first two mayors of Quincy is a distinguished one.

The meteor which Officer McKay of the Willard school saw, created quite a scare at Madison, Maine. New Rules on Old Colony.

The engineers and conductors of the Old Colony have been notified that express passenger trains hereafter have the preference of approaching stations where not scheduled to stop over local passenger trains, which will keep out of the way of the above mentioned trains. Heretofore if a passenger train was ahead of an express train it had the right of way over the express train, which was obliged to run at a slow rate of speed, but the new orders just issued have abolished this method and the local trains will slow up on approaching a station or stop before reaching it until the express train passes,

Orders have been issued by the Old Colony to the effect that engineers and conductors will see that hereafter their trains are under control upon entering South Boston and Boston yards so that they can be quickly stopped, if necessary. It has been the custom of late upon entering these yards to have the trains running at a good rate of speed.

The annual fair opened Wednesday evening with a large audience. The numerous tables for the sale of fancy articles showed an unusual fine line of goods which met with a ready sale at good prices. The article which attracted the most attention was an excellent crayon portrait of the pastor, Rev. J. H. Yeoman, which was contributed by Mr. S. E. Perkins and was disposed of by votes. The entertainment the first evening consisted of solos by Mrs. S. E. Perkins, piano duett by Mrs. Louis Rinn and Mrs. John Carver, and a song and chorus by Mr. Harry W. Reed and Messrs. B. F. Thomas and James Curtin.

The second night also of the Ladies' Benevolent Societies' fair proved a stormy one, but the attendance, nevertheless, was large. The articles on the many tables were nearly all sold, and the receipts must have been large, though it is too early yet to give the figures. Socially, the fair was one of the best ever held in Atlantic. The entertainment programme of the second evening was cut short by the absence, on account of the storm, of several out-of-town artists, but all present enjoyed the short musical numbers given. Mr. Henry Whittaker, organist of St. John's church, Boston, played the piano and Master Harry Blackwell delighted the audience with his harmonica solos. During the evening, Miss Isabel Emery, in behalf of the ladies, presented to Mrs. Yeoman the crayon portrait of her husband, Rev. J. H. Yeoman, made by Mr. S. E. Perkins of this place, given by him to the fair. The portrait was declared by all to be a speaking likeness and the finest crayon work ever seen in the place. A GRAND PRIZE.

$18 Suit of Clothes to Newsboys making Largest Sale in March.

We want to sell 2000 to 3000 copies of the DAILY LEDGER per day during the month of March. The popularity contest has given the little daily a good advertisement, and increased the circulation nearly 100 per cent., but there are still some families where the paper does not enter. We know of no better way to do this than by offering the newsboys a grand prize, and the one we have selected is a very valuable one, a custom made suit of clothes which would cost $18 at a tailor's.

Arrangements have been made with Mr. Bamford, the well-known tailor in Durgin & Merrill block, who will take the measure of the winner, allow him to select his cloth, and make him a "bang up" suit of the latest style.

Boys, this is your chance. It is open to all boys in the city, and LEDGERS may be procured at the office or of any of the agents, at the regular price.

All baking powders that are offered the public under misrepresentation as to their ingredients are dangerous. Alum powders are invariably sold under the guarantee that they are pure and wholesome cream of tartar powders. A baking powder now notoriously advertised as having published upon its labels all the ingredients used in it is shown by recent investigation to have in its composition four different substances not upon its label, two of which substances are lime and sulphuric acid!

Protection from alum Baking Powders can only be had by declining to accept any substitute for the "Royal." All chemical tests, official and otherwise, prove the "Royal" to be absolutely pure and wholesome.

The official Report of the U. S. Government investigation, recently made, shows the Royal Baking Powder to be superior to all others in leavening strength, a cream of tartar powder of the highest quality.

Last Quarter, Mar. 3d, 2.38 P. M.

A SINGULAR state of affairs exists in Beverly. It seems opponents of a certain candidate nominated his son whose name is similar. Under the Australian ballot law no provision is made for withdrawal in towns, hence all names must appear although the persons themselves object. The Supreme court has so ruled.

A MEMBER of the Weymouth water board in arguing against the division of that town, says: "We are well enough off at present. With one of the finest water plants in the State; piping, as we do, more miles of streets than Quincy and Hingham."

If such is the fact, and the gentleman probably knows whereof he speaks, it is time Quincy braced up and controlled its water works and made extension. Quincy certainly has more miles of street, more houses and about 6000 more people, and should have more miles of piping.

Masonic Funeral.

The funeral of Mr. Joseph W. Robertson occurred on Sunday afternoon from his late residence on Adams street and was very largely attended by relatives, friends, business associates and Masons.

Rev. B. F. Eaton the Universalist clergyman of Weymouth and frequently of Quincy, officiated in a very able manner, and the singing was by the Mendelssohn Quartette of Boston which contributed greatly to the solemnity and impressiveness of the occasion. The Masonic services were performed at the house. The pall bearers were Gen. John L. Stephenson and Charles I. Litchfield, representing the Boston commandery of Knight Templars of which Mr. Robertson was a life member; Hon. Wm. A. Hodges and Amos Churchill representing Rural Lodge, F. and C. Mason; and Horace B. Spear and Charles A. Howland, representing the Board of Directors of the National Mount Wollaston Bank, the full board being present excepting E. B. Pratt the President, who is absent from the city.

There were handsome floral tributes from friends, the bank, the commandery and the lodge. The interment was at Mount Wollaston.

Essay on Wealth.

Mr. R. C. Allen delivered an essay on "Production and Distribution of Wealth" in the Clan McGregor literary meeting on Saturday night, Mr. Arch. A. Grassick presiding.

Wealth he described as the universal attainment of the highest physical, mental and moral condition of the human race, in sympathetic touch with everything within the compass of human knowledge. Wealth in its productive aspect is the universal active operation of the knowledge that knows how to bring the forces of nature from their primeval condition, whether material or immaterial, and chain them to the wants of mankind. The first and most important element of wealth is education. The torch of knowledge must precede its application in every enterprise, and by its light bring to a successful issue every combination of effort that is guided by its rays.

That stone cutter of all stone cutters, that hewed his path to the front rank of literary fame, — Hugh Miller, — in his "Schools and Schoolmasters" says: "The best schools I ever attended were the schools open to all men, and the best teachers I ever had—though severe in their discipline—were always easy of access." Yes, the teachers of science, art, philosophy the pulpit, the press and the platform, these are the true pioneers of all human progress. They founded empires, they guide states, they dispense liberty, light and peace. They govern the world, and deservedly so; for in all their labor they practically demonstrate to all men everywhere that man cannot and shall not live by bread alone. These are the great factors in all national wealth.

District Court, Quincy.

The district court room was uncomfortably crowded Saturday, so much so that an officer was placed in charge of the door to keep out the crowd of spectators. The cases to come before his Honor were:

Michael McDonald of Quincy, drunk, $8.

Thomas Ward of Braintree, drunk, $8, committed.

Thomas O'Brien of Randolph, was arraigned for keeping a liquor nuisance and for a sale to a minor, was continued one week. This will doubtless prove an interesting case as it is alleged that means were taken by bribery to keep the witnesses out of the way.

The case of John J. Ford and William J. Keegan for breaking and entering the stores of Edward Russell and W. H. Doble, came up for hearing Saturday, the two cases being tried together. Mr. McAnarney appeared for Ford, but Keegan had no counsel.

Mr. Doble and his clerks testified to finding the old clothes and empty boxes on the floor of the store the morning after the break; they also identified the articles found in the possession of Ford and Keegan when arrested as being the same as kept for sale at the store, and on some of the article the private marks.

The defence tried to show that these articles were the same as kept in other stores, and the articles marked might have been purchased by some parties and thus come into the defendants possession.

His Honor said while the evidence was circumstantial, the evidence was against them and they were each ordered to recognise in the sum of $800, on each of the two counts for their appearance at the Superior Court at Dedham in May next. In default they were committed.

John J. Ford for assault on James Coburn was fined $10; committed.

John J. Ford for bastardy preferred by Mary E. Anstey, was found guilty and bound over in $700 for his appearance at the Superior court in Dedham in May next. In default of bail he was committed.

James Leslie, of Quincy, drunk, $8.

James Blaine, of Quincy, drunk, $8.

James Mullen, of Quincy, drunk, $8.

The continued case of Henry Gilligan, of Weymouth, for assault on Mrs. Mary H. Perry an old lady 84 years of age, came up this morning when Gilligan pleaded guilty and was fined $60.

Patrick Weldon, of Braintree, drunk, $8.

Albert L. Cooledge of Weymouth, drunk, $7.

Timothy Biosnahan of Weymouth, drunk, $8.

James Coburn of Quincy, drunk, $9.

Thomas Ryan of Quincy, drunk, $8.

Bert. Lambert of Quincy, drunk, $8.

Luther A. Ford of Milton for using profane language, paid a fine of $11.

Unitarian Chapel.

The children of the Unitarian Society celebrated Washington's Birthday, Saturday afternoon and evening in the chapel and gave a most enjoyable entertainment. Mrs. George W. Morton had charge of the whole affair and the results attained must have been gratifying to her and her assistants.

No entertainment of this kind is ever complete without a piano solo by our talented musician, Mr. Frank C. Gilbert, and his selection, the first on the program was received with much applause. He and Miss Abby Chamberlin also acted as accompanists during the evening. The pantomime, "That Little Hatchet," was well acted, especially by little George Tupper who looked so sweet and innocent that we do not wonder that his father forgave him for testing his new hatchet on the cherry tree. Miss Rita Clark, in costume, made a most bewitching Japanese lady and sang "Tit Willow" in such a captivating way that she was obliged to respond to an encore. In the charade Allie Howland made quite a hit as Jocko, the ape, and was as full of mischief as any monkey we ever saw. The charade was in three acts and the word to be guessed was apron (ape-run). Little Girlie Alexander was a prime favorite throughout the whole entertainment, taking her part in a sweet little way all her own, and the "Kitten Song" which she sang with her sister Ruth, brought down the house. Quincy has a young violinist to be proud of in Walter Loud and his first selection was received with so much enthusiasm that he responded with another. The "Grandpa" of the operetta was Mr. Walter M. Packard, and a very good one he was too, and what a lot of granddaughters he did have.

The same program was given both afternoon and evening and supper was served between times, also ice cream and cake.

The attendance was good both afternoon and evening notwithstanding the wretched weather, and seemingly all felt well repaid for braving the elements.

—The Brockton fair will be held on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Sept. 30, Oct. 1, 2 and 3. Special attractions are now being engaged for this annual show. For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., Feb. 25, 1891.

The oleo bill seems sure of its passage this year. It has the Senate pretty unanimously in support of it and has passed the critical stage there. It is to be observed that the chief speaker for the bill this year was Senator Low, the farmer member from Essex, who voted against it last year and by whose position the bill was defeated. But the opposition has made itself heard. Senator Raymond of Middlesex told of his receiving a letter from Herbert Myrick, editor of the New England Homestead, that he would not be elected if he took ground against the oleo bill.

The House, Thursday afternoon, had a debate on the question of memorializing Congress for a law to permit the election of United States senators by the people. Unfortunately the question took a party turn. The committee on federal relations reported against any action and the Democratic members dissented. Debate in the House was on party lines and Mr. Lane of Springfield, in charge of the report, asked for a roll call, saying the "House had heard enough Democratic thunder." The vote was on party lines, except that two Republicans voted yes and one Democrat no.

Thursday afternoon the woman suffragists had the hall of the House and spoke to a small proportion of the members. The Blackwells, Mrs. Howe and Mr. Garrison were the speakers.

The constitutional amendments for biennial elections and for the abolition of the poll tax as a suffrage qualification, which were passed by the Senate last week, have come into the House and been assigned to next week Wednesday by agreement of both sides. Following the same arrangement as in the Senate, the biennials resolve stands first, so that the Democrats must decide upon that before the Republicans are compelled to show their hand on the poll tax. At present there is a belief that the Republicans will not dare to defeat the poll tax amendment as a punishment of the Democrats for refusing to pass the biennial resolve. Those who are opposed to biennials believe they can defeat it, but the resolve is favored by some of the shrewdest and broadest workers in the House and they are fully equal to pledging enough members quietly to pass the resolve, letting their opponents delude themselves with the belief that they have a sure thing. Tuesday afternoon a conference of Democrats and a few Republicans who oppose biennials was held and it was voted to appoint a committee to shape the opposition in the debate next Wednesday.

One of the great matters of the session, properly speaking, is the redistricting of the State for congressmen. That omnivorous Committee on Rules, which is practically becoming a great usurper and tries to "steer" the business of the entire Legislature, had the matter of redistricting referred to it and held four meetings on the matter before Friday, at which they came to a unanimous agreement, excepting Mr. Wardwell of Haverhill, that a redistricting bill should be reported this year.

Wednesday, Gov. Russell created some surprise by his summary removal of the entire gypsy moth commission and the appointment of three new commissioners to keep up their work till the legislature could act. He finds that the commission was inharmonious, expensive and inefficient and that sharp action is necessary to prevent this great curse of the gypsy moth from spreading all over the State and getting beyond control. It appears that W. W. Rawson, one of the commission, sold the commissioners $928.50 worth of goods and that J. H. Bradley, secretary of the commission, let his team to the commission to the extent of $297.50 worth, and that the commission as a whole approved these bills. There are other charges which go to make out a bad prima facie case against the old commissioners. The new appointees are Prof. N. S. Shober of Harvard, F. H. Appleton of Peabody and Secretary Sessions of the State Board of Agriculture. All of them belong to the Board of Agriculture and the Governor recommends that the entire work be turned over to the Board and the commission abolished. Two of the three new appointees are Republicans.

The Committee on Rules has reported a bill to forbid, on pain of $100 fine for each offense, the offering of any entertainment by petitioners before the Legislature to members, or the receiving of any such entertainment by members. This is a result of the Algonquin Club dinners to the Legislature last year by the West End Street Railway Company. RULE.

Birthday Celebrated.

Relatives and friends to the number of forty gathered at the residence of Mr. N. B. Furnald, 68 Washington street, Monday afternoon to fittingly observe the eighty-fourth natal anniversary of Mrs. Furnald's mother, Mrs. Sarah A. Burrell. Friends were present from Boston, Jamaica Plain, Medford, Newton Centre, Weymouth, North Weymouth, South Boston, Assonet, Dedham and this city. There are six children, thirteen grandchildren and six great grandchildren. The children, eight grandchildren and one great grandchild were present. Master Channing I. Furnald, the great grandchild referred to, spoke the following original poem, written for the occasion in which reference is made to a "grand and great grandchild on the dark blue sea, homeward bound from Zanzibar, East Africa."

The Babe on the Sea.

O ye winds of Atlantic blow fair and blow free,
For somewhere way off on the waves of the sea
Sails a ship, bringing "Baby" to great grandmamma,
From black Africa land, from far Zanzibar.

'Tis a wee, wee small boy with a big, big, big name,
Which he bears for the love of a ruler of fame;
But vex not thy tongue, my sweet grandmamma
O'er the name of this Sultan of far Zanzibar.

For "Baby" is sweetest for real Yankee baby,
Tho' "Kalf"—something or other his true cognomen may be;
But we'll teach him to be, won't we, dear grandmamma
Like his name-giver good of far Zanzibar.

So, blow ocean breezes, and speed him safe home
From his dear native land, no longer to roam;
He's American true, like his great grandmamma,
In spite of his birth in the far Zanzibar.

A sumptuous supper was enjoyed by the guests. Singing by the Jamaica Plain quartette was highly enjoyed, also the instrumental music furnished by the Holt & Pierce orchestra.

Mrs. Burrell was the recipient of many useful articles.

Concert and Dance.

The City Band of Quincy held its fourth annual concert and dance last week Friday evening, at Hancock hall, a goodly number being in attendance.

The first part of the evening's programme was an excellent concert which opened with a march and overture by the band, who also appeared in several other numbers. Mr. Harry Sprague gave a baritone solo, entitled "Tramp, Tramp" and Mr. A. Raleigh a clarinet solo, entitled "Concert Polonaise;" Miss Lizzie Mason the talented young Quincy lady gave a pleasing selection; Mr. M. F. Lynch, the eminent tenor of New York sang two selections "Amo Mattei" and "Afton Water" in a manner that called for a loud applause. The other numbers on the programme was filled by Mr. Edward W. Emerson, the well known humorist of Boston, whose abilities in that line are too well known to need any further comment other than say he freely sustained his well known reputation.

The selections by the band were excellent and showed that the members had not been idle during the past few months and they bid fair to soon take their place among the first bands of the state.

The concert over, dancing was in order until a late hour, music being furnished by Dunbar's orchestra of Boston. At midnight Caterer Wales served an oyster supper in the lower hall and refreshments were on sale all night. The floor was in charge of William Dickie, who was assisted by Thomas Raleigh and the following aids: J. Smith, H. Sprague, W. H. Jones, R. Souden and C. Nash.

The committee of arrangements were: J. C. Murray, president; T. Raleigh, secretary, and W. Dickie, J. Smith, F. Kinna, A. C. Raleigh, W. H. Jones, H. Lewis, and H. Sprague.

Alpha Assembly.

The second of the Alpha assemblies was given in Faxon hall Monday evening and was fully as enjoyable as its predecessor, and more largely attended. The half dozen old bachelors were determined that that they should not be taken for benedicts and wore as a distinguishing badge little George Washington hatchets; they could not tell a lie you know.

Excellent music was furnished by five pieces. All through the evening lemonade was served and during a brief intermission ice cream and cake by Caterer Wales. Mrs. Stetson was highly complimented on the success of the party.

The importance of purifying the blood cannot be overestimated, for without pure blood you cannot enjoy good health.

At this season nearly every one needs a good medicine to purify, vitalize, and enrich the blood, and Hood's Sarsaparilla is worthy your confidence. It is peculiar in that it strengthens and builds up the system, creates an appetite, and tones the digestion, while it eradicates disease. Give it a trial.

NORFOLK, SS. SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MARGARET A. BABCOCK,

vs.

ROBERT LANE.

PETITION TO SETTLE TITLE.

To the Honorable the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, sitting within and for the County of Norfolk:

RESPECTFULLY Represents your petitioner, Margaret A. Babcock, that she is and for a long time has been the owner of a piece or parcel of land situated on Willard Street in Quincy, in said County of Norfolk, which said land is bounded and described as follows, to wit:—

Westerly on Willard Street about twelve (12) rods: southerly on land formerly of George McCullen about eight (8) rods: easterly on land of J. W. Robinson about fourteen (14) rods: northerly on land formerly of William F. Johnson about eight rods, or however otherwise bounded, containing about one hundred and four (104) square rods, more or less:

That said property was conveyed to her by a deed dated August 15, 1877, from Charles F. Babcock, Margaret H. Babcock, Josiah Babcock, and Flora M. Babcock, being the heirs-at-law of the late Josiah Babcock of Milton, said deed being recorded in the Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 495, folio 54: that the late Josiah Babcock came into possession of said premises through one Joseph Corliss by deed dated October 22nd, 1849, recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 190, folio 182: that the record title of said property now owned by your petitioner is encumbered by an undischarged mortgage given by said Joseph Corliss, while he was owner, to one Robert Lane, for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars and interest, dated August 3, 1849, for the term of three years, said mortgage deed being recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 189, folio 153: that since the said deed of August 15, 1877 to your petitioner, your petitioner has had possession of said premises: that the possession of the several owners and occupants of said premises has been continous and uninterrupted for a period of more than twenty years since the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the performance of the conditions thereof, namely, August 3, 1852: that no payment has been made within twenty years on the debt secured by said mortgage, and no other act has been done by any one of the occupants in recognition of the valid existence of said mortgage: that said mortgage constitutes a cloud upon her title to said premises: that the respondent is the mortgagee named in said undischarged mortgage and the only party known to your petitioner interested in said morgage, and that your petitioner does not know the whereabouts of said mortgagee

Your petitioner therefore prays that due notice be given to the respondent and all other parties interested, by publication or otherwise, as may be ordered, of this petition: that a hearing be had, and that the Court will order a decree to be entered which shall set forth the facts as herein alleged and the finding of the Court in accordance therewith, to the end that said decree may be duly recorded in the registry of deeds as provided by Statutes of 1882, Chapter 237, and that thereafter no action shall be brought by any person to enforce said mortgage.

MARGARET A. BABCOCK,
By her Attorneys,

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, FEB. 28, 1891.

A True Bostonian.

A soul from earth to heaven went,
 To whom the saint, as he drew near,
Said; "Sir, what claim do you present
 To us to be admitted here?"

"In Boston I was born and bred
 And in her schools was educated;
I afterwards at Harvard read,
 And was with honors graduated.

In Trinity a pew I own,
 Where Brooks is held in such respect,
And the society is known
 To be the cream of the select.

In fair Nahant—a charming spot—
 I own a villa, lawns, arcades,
And, last, a handsome burial lot
 In dead Mount Auburn's hallowed shades."

St. Peter mused and shook his head,
 Then as a gentle sigh he drew,
"Go back to Boston, friend," he said,
 "Heaven isn't good enough for you."

—Somerville Journal.

Household Receipts.

MERINGUE PUDDING. Line a deep pudding dish with slices of sponge cake, cover with rich fruit jam, pour over custard and bake, ice like cake, set in the stove to dry, take out and cover with meringue. Serve without sauce.

CUSTARD PUDDING. Take a pint of milk, one cup of sugar and six eggs. Beat the sugar and eggs together, flavor with vanilla. Pour the milk in a pudding dish, mix in the eggs and the sugar. Bake half an hour.

CUP CAKE. One cup of sugar, three-quarters of a cup of water, one-quarter of a cup of butter, $2\frac{1}{2}$ cups of flour, three eggs, two teaspoons of baking powder. Beat butter and sugar together, add yolks of eggs and beat well; add water, flour and baking powder, last the beaten whites of the eggs. Bake in a moderate oven.

CORNMEAL PANCAKES. One pint of cornmeal, one teaspoonful of salt, small teaspoon of soda, pour on boiling water until a little thinner than mush, let stand until cool, add the yolks of four eggs, half a cup of flour, in which is mixed two teaspoons of cream tartar, stir in as much sweet milk or water as will make it suitable to bake; beat the whites of the eggs well and add just before baking.

PLUM PUDDING SAUCE. An excellent sauce for plum pudding can be made from the following receipt. Stir to a cream a cup of butter, three cups of powdered sugar. When quite light, add the juice of one lemon, two teaspoonfuls of nutmeg and the whites of two eggs beaten very stiff.

HAM OMELET. The scraps left of boiled ham, if not more than three great spoonsful makes a good omelet for breakfast. Take four or five eggs, beat well, add a cupful of milk, put the ham in a fryingpan on the fire, warm a few minutes, then add the milk and eggs and stir together. This makes enough for five in one family.

RAISIN CAKE. One-half cup of butter one cup of sugar, one cup of sour milk, two eggs, one cup of raisins, one-half teaspoon of soda, one teaspoon each of cloves, cinnamon and nutmeg.

Anecdotes.

"I'm feeling very ill again, doctor. Do you think I am going to die?"

"My dear madame, compose yourself. That is the last thing in the world that is going to happen to you."

Gilroy—"Colonel Rox, who is worth two millions now, began life without a cent in his pocket."

Larkin—"That's nothing, I didn't even have a pocket when I began life."

Johnson—"Just think of Longfellow being able to write a poem on such stuff as that."

Jackson—"What?"

Johnson (pointing)—"Excelsior!"

"Can your little brother talk now?"

"Yes, he can say some words real well."

"What are they?"

"I don't know."

"They're words I never heard before."

—Harper's Young People.

Simpson—"Whatever induced your uncle to marry the widow of a man who was hung?"

Jimpson—"He had been married to widows before, and says he was tired of having the virtues of a former husband constantly flung in his face."

Horrified mother—"I just this minute saw Mr. Nicefello's arm around your waist."

Repentant daughter—"Y-e-e-s, mother; but it would be a—a good deal more awful to see his arm around some other girl's waist."

KEEP HIM IN NEW YORK. An eccentric religionist who believes in pounding goodness into people has come to light out in Augusta, N. Y. His name is Chas. Holcomb, and his wife has just been granted a divorce on rather peculiar grounds. She testified that her husband was very punctilious in his religious worship, holding family prayers three times a day, and would often arise from his prayers and pound the members of his flock with the family Bible. He gave his wife particular attention in his peculiar clubbing exercises.

☞ For the quarter ending Jan. 31st the net bank deposits for the State have decreased over $2,000,000. Insurance Commissioner Merrill says that he considers the decline in savings bank investments as the direct result of the new insurance ventures. Whatever may be said of the excellence or hurtfulness of the assessment endowment companies, it must be admitted that many men are carrying more policies than they can afford. The assessments mount up fast in the course of a month.

☞ A lady missionary in India is reported as saying that the boxes of clothing sent from New York last year contained 2000 pairs of corsets, 700 pairs of rubber garters and 3500 dresses ribbed with whalebone and steel. So severe were civilized tortures inflicted by these fashionable garments that the natives refused to wear them.

—At a town meeting in Hyde Park, Monday, it was voted to make a contract for 105 arc lights to burn from dark until 12.30 every dark night at $7000 a year.

—The Republicans of Avon have nominated Joseph B. Leonard, George J. Smith and George K. Edwards for selectmen, assessors and overseers of the poor.

—The subject of employing a superintendent of schools will come before the town of Sharon at the annual town meeting.

Two thousand girls are taking lessons in the cooking schools of Boston.

Boston Theatres.

Tremont.

The world-wide favorite, dainty Minnie Palmer, needs no introduction to a Boston public for her piquancy and grace, her personal charms, are all greatly appreciated by theatre-goers everywhere, and her accomplishments as a vocalist and a dancer are recognized as of the highest. Minnie Palmer comes to the Tremont theatre the week of March 2, and will appear in her new melodrama, "A Mile a minute." The play has made a wonderful impression, being of that sort which an audience takes kindly to. It has a robust plot, a very masculine villain, a detective and a heroine who can sing and dance, but the sensation of the drama is reserved for the fourth act, in which the hero and the detective are in pursuit of the villian, who has just taken a train, which compels the pursuers to hire a special engine. This engine occupies with its tender, the whole breadth of the stage, and is represented at full speed, make a striking picture.

Hollis Street.

The Kendals are the greatest attractions of the season; the house is always filled in every corner, tickets being secured a week ahead. Next week, Monday and Tuesday evenings and Wednesday matinee they will appear in "The Iron Master;" Wednesday evening "The Queen's Shilling;" Thursday and Friday evening double bill, "It Was a Dream" and "The Money Spinner;" Saturday matinee "The Queen's Shilling," and Saturday evening "The Iron Master." As this is the last week of the engagement it behooves all lovers of fine acting to get tickets at once, and see the English favorites.

Boston Museum.

This evening is set down as a benefit for Miss Annie Clark, when she is to appear in the leading role of a new comedietta, entitled "An Open Gate;" also in Buckstone's old comedy, "Leap Year." Commencing Monday, March 2, R. C. Carton's "Sunlight and Shadow" will be produced with the following cast;

Dr. Latimer	George C. Boniface
Mark Denzil	George Barron
George Addis (Choirmaster)	George W. Wilson
Mr. Bamfield	Junius B. Booth
Scollick, a Gardener	Charles S. Abbe
Helen. } The Doctor's {	Miss Evelyn Campbell
Maude. } Daughter's {	Miss Miriam O'Leary
Janet Felton	Miss Annie M. Clarke

Preceding "Sunlight and Shadow" at each performance "A Cup of Tea" is to be acted with this cast:

Scroggins	George W. Wilson

He Knew His Rights.

"Say, you let go of that!" shouted the driver.

"Don't you try to run over me!" retorted the pedestrian.

The conversation took place at a muddy crossing between a driver on a delivery wagon and a man with a basket on his arm. The latter, to avoid being run over, had seized the horse by the bridle and stopped the animal with a suddenness that nearly threw the driver off his seat.

"Keep out of the way if you don't want to get run over!" yelled the Jehu.

"My friend," answered the man on the crossing, still holding the horse by the bits, "don't you know that this crossing belongs to the people of Chicago?"

"You let go that horse!"

"Now, be reasonable, my dear sir. This crossing is merely a continuation of the sidewalk. It belongs to the pedestrians. I have the right of way, and"— "If you don't let go of that I'll"—

"Hold on a moment. Don't get excited, my friend. The law is perfectly clear on this point. The courts have decided time and again that a person who is on a street crossing"—

"You let go of that horse or I'll break your head!"

"Be calm, my friend. Preserve your equilibrium. It is the case of Varner vs. Neber 44th Ill., page"—

"Take that!" roared the infuriated driver, striking at him with his whip.

"Once more I ask you not to get excited" answered the man on the crossing, dodging the whip. "You will find, by referring to the well-known case of Skean vs. Dockrush, 47th Ill., page 33"—

The driver landed his whip squarely on the shoulders of the argumentative citizen.

"Now will you let go that horse?" he fiercely demanded.

"Certainly," was the answer. "If you won't listen to the law, I shall have to try another kind of argument."

The next instant the driver found himself jerked out of the wagon and rolling over and over in the street. He was dragged through a mud puddle on his back, turned over and pulled through it again on his face, and when he was permitted to get up his most intimate creditor wouldn't know him.

"You may climb in and drive on again, my friend," said the citizen, picking up his basket. "You don't look quite so handsome as you did, but you know a good deal more about law."—Our Dumb Animals.

—The Fall River line steamers have gone back to their summer time tables, now leaving New York at 5 P. M. instead of 4.30. The Sunday trips are omitted.

The proprietor of a leading American menagerie says that his gains by the birth of wild animals in his show are annually about $50,000 greater than his losses by the deaths in the collection.

Missouri annually expends more than $7000 for tobacco for the convicts in the penitentiary.

—Michael Keenan, of Cohasset, lately ate thirteen raw eggs, shells and all, a wager having been made that he couldn't do it.

It's economical—Brussels soap.

Hints for Maintaining Health.

When the health is fairly good, and there is no special strain to be put upon the system, the normal appetite may be trusted to indicate the kind and quantity of food necessary to maintain that condition. Naturally the appetite varies with the changing seasons, and unless it indicates an unreasonable extreme of indulgence or abstinence, no attention need be paid to any other monitor. Much harm is done by injudicious or meddlesome friends suggesting that a person is too stout or too thin, too pale or too ruddy, and serious disturbances of the system often follow the mischievous advice to take some bitters or pills, or refrain from fattening food or drink. Paying attention to any of these fads is like playing with fire. If you are ill enough to seem to warrant any radical change of diet or any application of medicine, consult your physician at once. Above all, avoid advertised quack medicines. To use the opinion of a successful dealer in them, whose bank balance is more liberal than his conscience, they are "made to sell."

If you feel a little debilitated take the coca tonic; eat plenty of fresh, ripe fruit and vegetables, especially oranges; drink lemonade; and when unusually fatigued, and just before retiring, drunk a glass of hot milk as hot as can be taken, in large sips. Walk reasonably and sleep in pure air. If a few days of this sort of home treatment fail to bring up the body and mind to their proper tone, call in your doctor and follow his advice.—Harper's Bazar.

According to the official count of the returns of the 11th census the only Counties in the State which show a decrease are Barnstable and Nantucket.

THE ANATOMY OF NATIONAL LIFE. In a recent lecture in New York on "Oriental Thought" Professor E. P. Thwing, M. D., of Brooklyn, Member of the Royal Asiatic Society, drew attention to the initial elements, the physical factors revealed in the geographical position of a continent, its climate, scenery and soil. He quoted the remark of Dr. Coan of the Sandwich Islands that the Gulf Stream gave Europe its present civilization and the occlusion of the Pacific at Behrings Strait made Polynesia what it is. Volcanoes and seismic disturbances, typhoons are related, he said to the abnormal development of the imagination and the thanatophidia of the East to demonology. Thermal extremes produce industrial and so moral instability. The study of physical geography and anciliary themes is fundamental. Only by a patient analysis is a true synthesis and so a rational science gained of human civilization. Buckle drew notice to this method thirty years ago but modern research has illuminated the subject and emphasized its importance to every student of ethnology.

☞ The cheerful warmth and general attractiveness of saloons and state-rooms of the steamboats of the Fall River Line are even better in Winter than in Summer time, so great is the contrast between their home comforts, and the outside surroundings. The "Pilgrim" and "Providence" are in commission this season.

It is idle curiosity that prompts a boy to look upon the "true inwardness" of a gun, and immediately afterward throw both heels clear out of sight behind the clouds, but it is pure necessity that causes the prudent housewife to use the economical Brussels soap.

Poetry.

Under Sealed Orders.

Out she swung from her moorings,
And over the harbor bar;
As the moon was slowly rising
She faded from sight afar,
And we traced her gleaming canvas
By the twinkling evening star.

None knew the port she sailed for,
Nor whither her cruise would be;
Her future course was shrouded
In silence and mystery;
She was sailing under "sealed orders,"
To be opened out at sea.

So souls, cut off from moorings,
Go drifting into the night,
Darkness before and around them,
With scarce a glimmer of light;
They are acting under "sealed orders,"
And sailing by faith, not sight.

Keeping the line of duty
Through good and evil report,
They shall ride the storms out safely,
Be the passage long or short;
For the ship that carries God's orders
Shall anchor at last in port.

Miscellany.

A MATTER OF BUSINESS.

The one particular clause in his sister Kate's letter puzzled John Warner as he leaned his arms upon his desk and read it for the third time.

It ran as follows, brief and to the point, and, coming from a spinster who had, prematurely, eschewed all sentimentality, it appeared queer: "Really, John, a man of your position and wealth should surely marry."

John read it again and again; the more he read it the more queer it appeared to him. True, he had reached a position in business that was most satisfactory; wealth he had beyond a doubt; was healthy, belonged to a fashionable club, was a regular "first-nighter" and enjoyed an occasional toddy with a few chosen friends.

But, marry!

"Bosh! all confounded bosh! Kate's brewing sentiment in her old age—steady, Kate's only thirty, and quite a superb-looking woman at that. She's a brunette, I believe, and they weather advancing age best, 'tis said. I marry! Nonsense! It's all rubbish! I hate all things pertaining to women—all but jolly old Kate. She's a clever woman. I wonder why she isn't married to some bright fellow? I'm tired of clubs and such; I wish Kate would marry. Oh, I'd like to have a lot of little nephews and nieces climbing all over me and fishing through my pockets for pennies. But Kate's too old, or at least I suppose she thinks so. Humph! I'm old, too. Five years older than she. I marry! Nonsense. Can't think of such a step at my time of life.

John was unconsciously thinking aloud, and his confidential clerk had rapped three times before he heard him. Pushing the letter underneath a newspaper, he said:

"Come in."

"The party up in Albany sends a letter inquiring about that last lot of hose. It seems—"

"Sit down, Jackson; sit down and listen to me for a moment," broke in John.

Jackson was puzzled. Business before all other things had always been John's motto. Now it seems it is all something else.

"I'm called a good business man, eh Jackson?"

"I'm glad to say so, Mr. Warner," replied Jackson.

"Never stopped the whirl of business for sentiment, eh, Jackson?

"I should hope not."

"Quite correct, Jackson, quite correct. Did you ever meet my sister Kate?"

"It is a pleasure I have never had."

"Humph! Kate's a business woman; a woman of great tact, but she's growing the bump of sentimentality in her old age—"

"Old age?"

"Yes; she's thirty. Jackson, Kate advises me to marry. Don't be alarmed that I for a moment seriously consider such a nonsensical idea. However, now for the business which I detained you for. Kate's coming to pay me a visit; going to bring along the country parson's daughter to see the city sights. I'm too busy to meet her at the train. Jackson, you must go and bring the pair from the dep—"

"I—I'm not a lady's man—"

"It is purely a matter of business; just that and nothing more, Jackson. Go and do it the same as you would to see about a consignment of all-wool hose. Perhaps you'd better drop a line to the effect that his order for British half-hose will be shipped by the first freight in the morning."

Warner turned his revolving chair to the desk, and Jackson left only to enter again.

"What train did you say? he asked.

"First freight in the morning—"

"I mean what train did you expect the ladies to come on?"

"Be at the Union depot at 4.30—"

"But I might not know—"

"Kate always wears red, very red and very bright. Brunette and stylish. Oh, never fear; you'll be sure to know Kate."

The door closed and Warner was once more alone.

"I'll be hanged if I will marry. Can't force us into any such a trap as that. Kate's a fool!"

John said other harsh things about his clever sister Kate, things not necessary to speak of here; all the while he felt like a poor, lonely man about to be ambushed and led to the slaughter by smart women.

He hurried out for a lunch, rushed himself among his papers, books, reports and the many things that busy a man who attends in person to his business affairs. The light was stuck in his office, the clerks separated, and the night-watchman entered, still John Warner remained, thinking, thinking, thinking.

It was a queer life he led. Business, all, all business; push from dawn till dark, with but few moments of respite from labor. Little time for pleasure—only his "first nights," his short stop at the club for an occasional chat with a few chosen friends.

The door opened and Jackson entered, looking ten years younger.

"I never met a more charming woman in all my life. Mr. Warner, I envy you your visitors. She's the most regal creature—"

"Bosh! Jackson, when a man begins to call a woman a regal creature he shows evident signs of mania. They're all alike. Jackson, every one of them. They all want to trap, trap, trap. And what? Men, nothing but men. Go home, Jackson and sleep it off. You poor old fossil you. You envy me my visitors? I look upon it as something fearful to have a woman fussing about."

"But this woman—"

"I tell you, Jackson, they're all alike. Well, I'm going home. Suppose I'll be in torments until Kate goes back. Going, too? I tell you Jackson, it'll never do, never, sir. Never let a rattle-brained woman break into one's business affairs is my motto. Here's your car. You go down while I go up. Good night."

Fifteen minutes later John Warner was warmly greeted by a beautiful woman—his sister Kate.

"Kate, for heaven's sake don't choke me to death. I'm glad to see you, and—"

Then he stopped at his eyes fell upon the other occupant of the room. She was petite, a blonde, and had dimpling cheeks, lovely eyes, and a shy, reticent air that was innocence and simplicity itself.

Sometimes love takes a year to spring into existence, but John Warner, the plain man of business was enmeshed in its tanalizing and fascinating folds at first sight. When his sister introduced him to this dainty girl his heart bobbed and he felt a peculiar sensation in his throat, and his hand trembled like a schoolboy's as he felt the soft little palm touch his.

A pleasant dinner, a few bright glances from the most bewitching pair of eyes he had ever seen; and then, John Warner went to bed to dream dreams utterly out of place to a man so wholly absorbed in business as he was.

The days that followed were filled with brightness. John found it very easy to tear himself away from his office now. There was one thing, however, that worried him—Jackson's frequent visits to his house. He mentioned it carefully to him once or twice, but Jackson only blushed.

The point was reached one morning, when the confidential clerk entered the office, carefully closed the door, and said,—

"I love her—"

"So do I, Jackson, you and I have been friends for a good many years. I'll tell you frankly, I've made up my mind to marry this woman myself. I'm sorry if you have placed your heart—"

"I have. She loves me—"

"Wh—what?"

John Warner rose from his chair. Was he only doomed to see the dawn of his sunshine day sink into the gloom of despair?"

"You—you say she—loves you?"

"Yes, and has promised to give me her hand in marriage if I can obtain—"

"You must not think of such a thing, Jackson."

"But I do, and—"

"I am decided myself and shall ask her hand in marriage before—"

"Ha! ha! ha! how can you when she is your sister?"

It was John Warner's turn to look surprised, but he was too much of a business and bright thinking man not to take in at once the situation, and extended his hand cordially to his confidential clerk, saying:

"Take her and may you bring her the happiness she so richly deserves and I shall be proud to call you brother."

It is needless to say that John Warner wasted no time in seeking for his own, the jewell his sister brought with her to pay him a visit, and having obtained her consent a double wedding was arranged for at a not very distant day.—Yankee Blade.

Boundary Stones Placed.

The farmer lives in a strong house, his crops are good and around his lands he has built a fence, writes a surveyor. He means to cultivate every square foot of the ground within his bounds, but seldom are his bounds well defined. At every corner of the property a stone should be firmly planted in the ground, but in many places these stones are missing, and when the fences are crooked, which is generally the case, the correct boundary lines are difficult to locate. From this inadvertence of property holders considerable dispute arises when land is sold. Now, in many instances the contents of a parcel of land as stated in the deed cannot be found within the lines as laid down, and the real cause of the trouble is the indefinite location of corners.

When a tract of land lies at a great distance beyond the city limits the owner does not trouble himself in the least about the exact location of his property lines. In fact, he frequently describes his boundary by a line of trees or a stream of water. And then, after a lapse of years, the city is extended and the surveyor runs through the country with the lines of streets and avenues.

Farms are bought and the plans of subdivision are arranged. The value of ground is greatly enhanced, but on account of indefinite boundary lines many landed proprietors lose small areas which rightfully belong to them. Nor does it lie in the power of a surveyor to locate original lines when he has no data upon which to base his calculations.—Washington Star.

A Mule Trade.

It used to be the custom, and is now in many localities, to "beat down" in all trades with storekeepers and merchants. An amusing example of this practice is given below:

"In the old haggling way of trade it was customary to demand a great deal more than the asker hoped to get. One time, on the Texas frontier, a man came into camp riding on an old mule.

"How much for the mule?" asked a bystander.

"Jist a hundred dollars," answered the rider.

"I'll give you five dollars," said the other.

The rider stopped short, as if in amazement, and then dismounted.

"Stranger," said he, "I an't a-goin' to let the little matter of ninety-five dollars stand between me and a mule trade. The mule's yourn."

The washboard is a piano upon which women can play a tune of happiness with a cake of Brussels soap.

Eph Got the Chickens.

"You Northern folks don't begin to know the Southern nigger as he is," observed the Colonel as he lighted a fresh cigar and leaned back in his chair.

"No?"

"They are not vicious, but they are without moral obligation. Confound him, he's a thief from head to heel; I never saw an honest nigger yet."

"That's very sweeping, Colonel."

"But it's truth. I'll defy you to find me an honest nigger in all Georgia."

"I should say that gray-haired darkey over on the cotton bales could be trusted to watch a gold mine."

"You would, eh? Heah, boy, come heah!"

"What's wanted, Kurnel Peabody?" asked the old man, as he came over with his hat in his hand.

"Say, Eph, I want you to do me a little favor this evening."

"Sartin."

"I'll pay you for doing it."

"Bress your soul, sah."

"I want you to steal me a couple of young chickens and bring 'em to the store at seven o'clock."

"Steal 'em fur suah?"

"Yes, I'll give you a dollar."

"All right Marsa Peabody, I'll hev 'em dere by seben o'clock if I'm alive."

"What do you think of the nigger now?" asked the Colonel as the old man moved away.

"I'm astonished."

"Well, you be on hand at seven o'clock to see the chickens. He'll have 'em here."

So he did. He came to the back door of the store with a couple of pullets in a bag, and as he handed them over he said:

"Ize got 'em fur you, Kurnel, an' dey is as fat as butter. Don't reckon you'll say nuffin' 'bout it, eh?"

"Not a word, Eph. Here's your dollar."

I had no argument to make that evening. There were the nigger, the chickens and the dollar. What could I say? Next morning I went down to the Colonel's office, and I had scarcely stepped inside when he called out:

"What do you think of the nigger now?"

"Anything new happened?"

"I should say so! Where do you think old Eph stole those chickens?"

"I have no idea."

"But I have. The infernal rascal stole 'em from my own coop, and three or four more with 'em!"

A Child's Sense of Justice.

Nothing seems to burn into the memory and heart of a child as an undeserved punishment, however trifling the matter may seem to the adult inflicter. In some children of the sunny, hopeful type the wave of indignation and helpless, unspoken protest against unjust correction passes away, and leaves apparently no trace. To other children, with more sensitive natures or more rebellious dispositions, unjust words of reproof kindle fires of rage, which smoulder with sullen persistence under the ashes of seeming forgetfulness, ready to burst out violently and unexpectedly. If this seems an overdrawn picture one has only to think backward to one's own childish days, and to recall the time when careless treatment by an elder first taught us to be bitter, unforgiving, resentful.

A child's sense of justice is as keen as his heart is tender, and this is one of the qualities most necessary to a noble character; a quality that must be blended with truth and honor and self-sacrifice to give the right balance to dispositions which would otherwise work harm. A child's justice is always tempered with mercy to those he loves, and when in the home he is justly and tenderly dealt with, he learns little by little that higher sense of justice towards all with whom he comes in contact. When his own small rights are carelessly and continually thrust aside, he, too, learns to play the brigand, to invent devices to achieve the might which he has learned makes right.—Harper's Bazar.

No Names.

There was only one black man in the village, and the old black woman who lived with her daughter on the outskirts was determined not to betray one of her own race, when she went to the justice of the peace to complain of the thefts about her place.

"Fust it's a chicken, 'n' odder time eggs; las' night foh de moon was up somebody came a rattlin' roun' de woodpile, and, jedge, I can't spare no wood, and you can done fin' some ways to perfect de innahcent."

A Tradition.

There is a tradition among watchmakers that prior to the year 1370 all clocks and watches were made with IV., the proper characters to mark 4 o'clock. In that year a clock was made for Charles V. of France, who was not only a crank, but a great fault-finder. The clock was a beauty, but Charles had to find fault. He examined it critically and finally broke out in a storm of rage because the hour 4 had been marked "IV.," insisting that four IIII's should be put on instead. This was done, and in order to perpetuate a king's mistake has been kept up ever since.

National Sailors' Home.

(CONCLUDED.)

We shall now deal with a subject that in its bearings we believe is fraught with interest to the public, as well as to all naval veterans, and that is the proposed removal of this Home to Middleboro, and from the grounds it has occupied here for the past twenty-four years, and as old veterans sometimes think,—yes, even reason therefore. We shall plainly express our opinions and profer some advice on that subject.

Let us look into this rather peculiar scheme. The present building can, we claim, at no great expense be repaired and strengthed, and thereby made to last quite a number of years longer. The large barn with carriage-house attached, the blacksmith shop, two ice-houses, and other small buildings are all substantial and otherwise good for use for many years to come, and all of which, in addition to the main building, would, Mr. Editor, have to be rebuilt in that suggestive location, Middleboro, at great expense to this corporation. Then comes the additional expense of moving the portable adjuncts of the farm, such as horses, cows, hay and farming implements; add to that again the transportation to Middleboro of the inmates and all the household furniture, and your readers may well inquire with us, if there is not a bug under the chip in the movement, and wherein is the great advantage to be gained in the change to offset the enormous expense it would entail on the funds of the Home. The whole scheme appears to us, who have long studied the matter, and will if carrid out, to be a costly absurdity, and quite evidently on the face of it, had its origin in the brain of some one who then expected a life long position in connection with this Home at Middleboro.

As naval veterans both in and outside the Home have been silent on this and other transactions in years past, we now propose to make some suggestions to the advocates of this funny business as follows: Gentlemen, sell the farm you purchased in Middleboro some twelve years ago or more and return the money from its sale back into the funds of the Home, and when an opportunity presents itself also sell about eighty acres of the lowland belonging to this Home, with the beach adjoining; place the money from its sale also in the funds. You will then have fifty acres of good farming land left, ample in quantity and quality for all demands of the Home; and which, if properly planted, tilled and harvested each season, will largely help to make the Home self-sustaining. And when it becomes necessary in the future to construct a new main building, we would advise you to erect it of the same capacity, parallel to and immediately in the front of the present house. When built, move inmates into it and demolish the old building; it is much easier and far less expensive than to transfer to Middleboro.

The New England states, Mr. Editor, furnished one-third of the men in the navy during the late war, Massachusetts alone furnishing 13,000, and whenever the flag is again imperiled the sons of New England may be relied on to rally in equal or even greater numbers to its defence. Therefore, a naval home such as this, is not a local but a permanent, national necessity in New England, and the United States government should erect the next building here, or at least assist this Home as it does the Soldiers' Home at Chelsea.

"No! gentlemen; the old sailors ought not to be put out in the wilderness," as it is reported one of the trustees said when objecting to the proposed new location, "but let them remain right here in view of that old ocean, upon whose waters they often sailed to victory through the conflicts of war in defence of the Union, and near their old shipmates under the sod and convenient to the navy yard in Boston, and from which, who can tell how soon, the sick and wounded of some other war may be sent to this Home for aid and shelter."

And now that the barriers of studied secrecy and obscurity that has surrounded this Home has been smashed down and daylight let in on some of the black spots in its past history, we hope it will not again be allowed to drift back into its old and rotten groove, but that this institution will be as was intended—a home and a shelter for naval sailors of the American navy.

The veterans sailors at the National Sailors' Home in Quincy are grateful to the publishers of the PATRIOT for inserting their story, and they hear with pleasure that you refused the request of prominent citizens to suppress them. We bid success to a paper that is true to its name, the PATRIOT.

Wappanuckett Farm.

MIDDLEBORO, Mass Feb. 28, 1891.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

In your edition of to-day, under the heading of "National Sailors' Home," I notice an assertion made by the writer, regarding which I am directly concerned, namely, as to the inmate who spent a month on this farm during the present winter. He says: the man was sent here by Dr. Faxon. This Mr. Editor, is not true. The man had sent word to me on various occasions that he would like to come here with me, and assist in doing any light work, or as we term it "choring around the barn;" saying he would be glad to come for his board, as the inmates at the Home were not those that he could associate with. I wrote him that if he would like to come I would see Dr. Faxon. In the meantime (to use his own words) he asked permission of Dr. Faxon, and was told that he could, if he wished.

Accordingly he came here in December, and before a week was like a fish out of water. He was so addicted to the use of liquor and this being a no license town, he was unable to obtain any. Why, Mr. Editor, he would seldom if ever sit down to his meals without giving expression to his craving. When he left this place he made no complaints regarding work, (in fact he could not, for what he had done was voluntarily), but said he was going to a home in Philadelphia.

The above, Mr. Editor, are undisputable facts which I am prepared to prove, and I am convinced after having read the correspondence and having personal knowledge of many of the things referred to, being an employe for a number of years, that, if the writer or the writers would confine themselves more strictly to the truth, the story that they would have to relate would be but very small.

Very truly yours,
W. CHAMBERLAIN, Manager.

Cruelty to Horses.

As you have often through the columns of your paper endeavored to better the condition of our dumb friends, I take the liberty of offering a few words on the subject with the hope that you may feel you can devote a small space of your paper to the good cause.

The torture inflicted upon that noble creature the horse, by their cruel drivers they can never tell any more than the merciful witness without calling for assistance in the endeavor to remedy the growing evil. Could the owners of the horses see the treatment they receive daily between Quincy and Neponset they would come to the conclusion that it was high time something was done. It is bad enough to overload, but when the poor beast is unable from perfect exhaustion to longer draw his burden, the cruel driver resorts to his cowhide, often kept concealed in the wagon, thinking it will have the effect the whip has by constant use has long since failed to do. I was an eye witness last week at Neponset to a poor emaciated horse standing with the blood dropping from his mouth, his body covered with welts, the result of the ungovernable temper of his driver. Perhaps by your kind assistance we can awaken your readers to the necessity of a movement that may relieve those unable to help themselves but who do all they can for us, notwithstanding their abuse and suffering.

Quincy's Sidewalks.

City corporation always have expensive improvements. No organized bodies act in this line with less expense. Along our main thoroughfares Quincy needs better conveniences for pedestrians, who compose eight-ninths of her population. Scarce twenty rods of uniform, well kept and dry walks connected can be found in our young city. We are taxed for conveniences which are furnished on a scale too limited for the money expended. An intelligent, thorough and economical system of public improvements we have not had. We believe the present young mayor and superintendent of public works are trying hard to effect a change. May they be backed in their efforts by an intelligent Council and progressive voters.

Here allow us to suggest that our sidewalks, like our carriageways, be taken wholly in charge by the city, that abortive attempts and private tinkering by abutters be stopped, that a thorough, uniform and comprehensive system be begun. Where underdrainage by a cobble stone bottom shall be made and where stone crossings of streets shall be laid, whether the surface shall be concrete or gravel, we would leave to the judgment of experts.

As to the material for these, why should the city buy by the horse load when land containing the right quality of stone and gravel can be bought at one-twentieth the cost to the city? Would private enterprise allow this?

Again it may be urged that the city should not be taxed for such now—certainly not. Such improvements as good streets and sidewalks, pure water supply and sewerage, if properly and substantially made, will bless not only us but our posterity. Why then not let posterity help share the expense of such benefits by long loans, at a low rate of interest, payable by a sinking fund? Such improvements will not only give us comforts now, but will invite taxpayers and capital from abroad to help us pay them.

Conservative real estate owners in Boston howled when the present system of water-works for the city was proposed. Has it paid? Think of Boston now with wells and Jamaica pond water through log pipes. Enterprize now asks for her a system of rapid transit. The same short-sighted policy howls back: No! good enough now. May Quincy read a lesson from older cities.

Curious Old Watch.

Charles S. Nelson, a painter, living in Chicago, Ill., recently received from his father in Copenhagen, Denmark, a watch, which it is claimed is 400 years old. Accompanying the watch are records which prove it to have been in the possession of the family for 200 years. This timepiece is smaller in circumference than the watches of the present day, but it is three times as thick and resembles a sphere cut in half. The face is open and the case is silver, bearing a carving of Cleopatra on her way down the Nile. On the face are two dials, one within the other. The outer one tells the minutes, hours, days of the week and of the month, there being separate hands for each. On the inner dial are representations of the sun, moon and stars. As the day wanes the sun becomes darkened and the moon and the stars shine, the inner dial being illuminated. How this is accomplished seems to be unknown.

The works are of hardened gold and are very intricate, but only require winding once every three weeks. The watch was wound up on leaving its Scandanavian home and was going on arriving in Chicago, but was a day ahead. Mr. Nelson took it to some of the leading watchmakers to have this defect remedied, but they refused to undertake the job owing to the intricate machinery of the watch. That it can be repaired the records show it to have been 196 years in the family set forth, for 174 years ago it was put to rights in Amsterdam, 148 years ago it was regulated in Hamburg, 85 years ago it was repaired in Copenhagen, and in 1864 it was put in order at Westervig, Denmark, by I. C. Christensen, a jeweler, who is now living somewhere on the North Side, in Chicago. The maker of this interesting chronometer was Steuter, of Amsterdam, but no date is given. Mr. Nelson showed the watch to a jeweler, who offered him $1000 for it, but Mr. Nelson declined it, and intends to retain the heirloom in his family.

☞ The new Argentine Pacific railroad from Buenos Ayres to the foot of the Andes has what is probably the longest tangent in the world. This is 211 miles without a curve. In this distance there is not a single bridge and no opening larger than an ordinary culvert, no cut greater than one meter in depth, and no fill of a height exceeding one meter.

How Her Hubby Put it.

"I am willing to work and work hard for my husband and children, but oh! I do so hate needless work which does not show the time and strength put into it. How I have washed and wrung out, and then washed again, all because the soap was one of those cheap resin affairs and did not cleanse. Now I use Brussels soap, and as hubby would put it, I save a hundred per cent in time and labor." Thus said Mrs. B. a firm friend of Brussels soap.

Sued for $20,000.

Dr. William L. Faxon, superintendent of the National Sailors' Home, has brought suit against the publishers of the PATRIOT in the sum of $20,000. We know not why the suit is brought unless it is because we have opened our columns to communications from the old sailors in the Home, who have felt grieved at the way they have been treated.

Our columns have always been open to Mr. Faxon, free of cost, to correct anything he thought was wrong, and no article from him or his friends concerning the Home has ever been refused. On two or more occasions we have published by request of his friends articles in reply to the old veterans.

Quincy's Postmasters.

We are unable to give the reason why the post office in Quincy was not established until three years after its separation and incorporation, unless it was that Congress had not sufficiently perfected the law to make the appointment. The first postmaster was Mr. Richard Cranch, who received his commission April 1, 1795. This post office was located in the southeasterly corner of Mr. Cranch's domain, on School street, in a small building placed there for the purpose. This fine estate is now in the possession of Mr. James Edwards.

Mr. Cranch's death occurred in 1811, and Dr. Benjamin Vinton was appointed to succeed him January 1, 1812. Dr. Vinton removed the office to his house on Granite street, corner of Hancock street, (next to the residence of the late John Briesler), which is still standing.

Dr. Vinton died in 1813, having held the office somewhat over one year. After his decease Mr. Mottram Veazie, the old Town Clerk, whose portrait still hangs in City Hall, received his commission as postmaster October 1, 1813. During Mr. Veazie's administration the office was kept at his residence, on Hancock street, where the Hancock Hotel, (now the Adams Academy boarding-house), stands.

At the death of Mr. Veazie, he was succeeded by Mr. Daniel French, August 11, 1825. Mr. French continued in office until March 20, 1849, having held the position for twenty-four successive years; if we include his re-appointment in 1853, which lasted about one year, it would make twenty-five years that he served the public in this capacity. Mr. French transacted the business of the office in his hotel, which was the old Veazie house, until he erected a more spacious hotel in 1837 on the same site.

A political change in administration of the government caused Mr. French to be removed, and Dr. William B. Bugbee succeeded him March 20, 1849. This was the first removal of a postmaster on political grounds since the incorporation of the town. Dr. Bugbee transferred the office to his apothecary shop, in the Town House, now the City Treasurer's office.

The late Francis Williams, who succeeded Dr. W. B. Bugbee, received his commission as postmaster September 8, 1851, and secured the building now occupied by Mr. John O. Holden, No. 154 Hancock street, for a post office. Mr. Williams being connected in more lucrative and important business, procured the services of Mr. Lysander S. Richards as acting postmaster.

On the election of Mr. Pierce, in 1852, as President, Mr. Daniel French, September 19, 1853, was re-appointed as postmaster. Mr. French removed the office to his residence on Temple street, formerly occupied by Mr. G. F. Wilson as a provision store.

Mr. John A. Green, the originator, former proprietor and editor of the Quincy PATRIOT, received his appointment October 21, 1854. Mr. Green removed the office to No. 154 Hancock street, the same building where Mr. Williams conducted the business of the office. Gen. Donahue and Mr. James M. Beckford were the acting postmasters under Mr. Green's administration.

During Mr. Buchanan's Presidency, Deacon George Baxter received a commission September 24, 1858, as postmaster for Quincy. Mr. Baxter removed the post office to the Town House, and occupied the room that is now used by the Commissioner of Public Works.

On the election of Mr. Lincoln as President, Deacon Baxter was removed, and Mr. George L. Gill appointed in his place, April 18, 1861. Mr. Gill established the office at No. 84 Hancock street, where the Quincy Savings Bank is now located, and was re-appointed June 16, 1865.

On the election of Gen. Grant, who desired to reward disabled soldiers of the late war, Mr. John B. Bass was appointed to succeed Mr. Gill. Mr. Bass received his commission September 21, 1866, and removed the office to Mr. Veazie's apothecary shop, No. 95 Hancock street. After remaining there several years, he removed the office to No. 80, on the opposite side of the street, now occupied by Ford Bros. Then he removed to the building at the head of Granite street, now Souther's periodical store.

When Mr. Samuel H. Spear received his commission in 1886, he removed the office to the quarters just vacated by Postmaster Adams, who succeeded Mr. Spear in 1890.

It will thus be seen that the Quincy office has had but twelve postmasters, and this is the centennial year of the city.

Fire at Wollaston.

The alarm from Box 51, 10.10 Monday morning was for a fire in a dwelling house on Wayland street, Wollaston, owned by Henry H. Faxon, and occupied H. E. Barstow and Robert Corthell.

The fire originated in the attic and was caused by a defective chimney and had made considerable headway when the employes of the Wollaston Machine Co., ran a line of hose from a hydrant near by and were doing good service when the department arrived and took charge.

The fire was confined to the attic and was extinguished after an hour's work, but not before barrels of water had been poured into the building.

Nearly all of the furniture of Messrs. Barstow and Corthell was taken out, but in a wet and damaged condition. Mr. Barstow who occupied the lower part of the house thinks his damage will amount to $200 on which there is no insurance.

Mr. Corthell occupied two rooms up stairs and had his goods all packed intending to move that day, his loss will be nearly $100, upon which there is no insurance.

Many of the firemen were wet through to the skin and suffered severely from the cold.

The employes of the Wollaston Machine Co. deserve thanks for assistance they rendered before the department arrival.

The way in which the Quincy Mutual Fire Insurance Company do business is illustrated by the fire of Monday at Wollaston. The fire occurred at 10 o'clock A. M., and in the early part of the afternoon an adjuster visited the scene and awarded $535. A check was drawn and the amount paid to Mr. Faxon before 5 o'clock, and repairs were begun the same day.

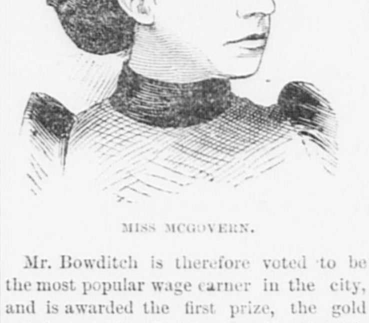
Mr. Bowditch Wins Watch.

The DAILY LEDGER popularity contest is over and the prizes have been announced. All that remains is to make the presentations.

Miss McGovern who headed the list from the eleventh day up to the last, has finally been forced into second place by her rival Mr. Bowditch. His vote is 31,280 against 27,688 for Miss McGovern.



MISS MCGOVERN.

Mr. Bowditch is therefore voted to be the most popular wage earner in the city, and is awarded the first prize, the gold watch, and Miss McGovern will take life easy in the elegant easy chair, which is awarded as the second prize.

The DAILY LEDGER was offered for one year as the third, fourth and fifth prizes, and were won by Messrs. Henry W. Tirrell, William Caldwell and David Morris.

The sixth, seventh and eigth prizes were the DAILY LEDGER for six months, and are won by Messrs. John W. Walsh, Henry L. Jones and Charles W. Purdy.

The vote on the last day or rather from Saturday to 6 P. M. Wednesday, was 37,572, and over 35,000 of these votes came during the last half hour. One of the Bowditch committee brought a bundle of 12,000, and shortly after another came with 8,000, and still another with several hundred. Several admirers of Mr. Bowditch had sent in smaller quanties so that his aggregate was 21,021.

It was ten minutes of the close of the polls when friends of Miss McGovern brought in the largest bundle. A count showed it to contain over 15,000, which with some scattering amounted to 15,762.

By the last summary published the total vote was 48,806. Adding to this the final vote of 37,572 and the grand total for the contest of fifty days was 86,378. The total number printed was 114,900, so that all but 28,522 were heard from.

The final summary is as follows:

Foy gets a Watch.

Members of the Q. M. C. B. Association, held their regular meeting Thursday evening, which was largely attended by the members. At 9 o'olock the members adjourned to Hancock hall where Caterer Nash had prepared a sumptuous repast for the boys. It is unnecessary to say they thoroughly enjoyed it. Supper over they returned to their own hall on Canal street, where Mr. A. I. Dixon took the floor, and in a short but pleasing speech presented the president, Mr. Robert E. Foy, in behalf of the members with a beautiful gold watch and chain.

The inside cover of the watch bore the following inscription.

Presented to
ROBERT E. FOY,
March 5, 1891,
by the
Q. M. C. B. A.

The charm which was of an oval shape had on one side the Q. M. C. B. A.

Mr. Foy who was greatly surprised at this act of appreciation by his fellow clerks, responded and thanked them one and all for their kindness.

The remainder of the evening was pleasantly passed, speeches being made by Andrew Kerwin, Alex. Thompson and Herbert Bouton, and singing by William Kingstree, Robert Prout and others.

CITY COUNCIL.

The Council of 1891 held its longest session Monday evening, considerable new and important business being introduced. Nineteen members were present; the absentees being Councilmen Duffield, Hayward and Morton.

Another Constable.

The Mayor notified the Council of the appointment of Samuel B. Turner as constable to serve without pay.

"Care of School Houses."

City Solicitor Hayes submitted an opinion as to the meaning "care of school houses" as used in the city charter, which in substance was that the charter treats School buildings as public buildings. It distinguishes between the REPAIRS and the care of said buildings, making it the duty of the Commissioner to attend to the former and directing the latter to remain under the control of the committee. The clause in the charter under consideration modifies the Public Statutes by relieving the committee of the duty of making repairs and by placing that responsibility upon the Commissioner. It was therefore his opinion that the care under said clause. embraces the general charge and superintendence so far as relates to the uses to which said buildings may be appropriated, the selection of janitors, providing of fuel, and other things necessary for the comfort of the pupils, including the making of slight repairs incidental to the occupancy of said buildings, which require no special skill and but trifling expense. All other repairs should be attended to by the Commissioner.

Hancock Street.

Mayor Fairbanks forwarded a communication of Commissioner Ewell, relative to the completion of the rebuilding of Hancock street. It reviewed at length the condition of the street at the present time, said the appropriation was exhausted, and estimated $9,200 would be necessary to complete. Referred to Committee on Streets.

The Culverts at Atlantic.

Mayor Fairbanks submitted a lengthy communication of the Commissioner relative to culvert under Hancock street, between Sqtantum street and the railroad bridge. Commissioner Ewell had made an investigation and found a culvert laid a number of years ago, 18 inches wide and 12 inches high through which the water passes very slowly after which it remains upon the flats and meadows. The wooden culvert which passes under the railroad is the same size and should be enlarged and deepened, and if lowered to the proper depth it would drain all the meadows. To enlarge the Hancock street, culvert would call for quite a sum of money and discommode travel as it is nearly ten feet below the paved and Telford road.

At a suitable time of the season temporary relief can be given by removing some of the sand and other accumulations.

The commissioner would advise that a tide gate be placed at the south side of the culvert which would keep the tide water out and allow the surface water to flow through. This would relieve most or all of the trouble from Teal pond. He would also suggest that the Committee on Sewers and Drains take such action as may be necessary toward the enlargement of the culvert under the tracks of the Old Colony Railroad.

Garfield Street.

A communication from Commissioner Ewell recommended $2250 for the improvement of Garfield street. He reviewed the situation at length and outlined the nature of the proposed improvements. Referred to joint committee on Streets and Sewers and Drains.

Schoolhouse Insurance.

Commissioner Ewell reported that $100,000 insurance could be placed on the schoolhouses of the city for five years for $1,931.25. Referred to Committee on Finance.

Councilman Jones hoped the committee would ascertain the loss which the city of Quincy had sustained by fire since its incorporation, and then estimate what the insurance would have cost. He was not sure but money had been made by not insuring.

Bills in Excess of Appropriations.

Auditor Hall submitted a list of bills of 1890 which were in excess of the balance of the appropriations as follows:

	Amt. of Bills.	Bal. of 1890 Appropriation.	Excess over Bal.
Widening and deepening brooks,	$236.50	$78.76	$157.74

	$3330.59	$986.22	$2344.34

School Estimates.

The estimates of the School Committee were submitted in print together with a statement of the expenditures in 1890. $65,125 is asked for this year, where last year $60,777.98 was appropriated, $60,723.45 expended, leaving balances amounting to $54.53 and bills amounting to $2,871.16, a deficit of $2,816.63.

The report was taken from the table and Councilman Bryant then proceeded to interrogate the School Committee. Whether the board approved all bills? How it was proposed to meet deficiency? How were contracts made for transportation? Were furnishings for new Willard included? How much coal would be required at new Willard? Whether $5000 would cover incidentals when over $6500 was spent in 1890? Why was the item of transportation increased?

Chairman Claflin replied that the board approved all bills; that deficiency was not included in this year's estimates. Contracts were not let to lowest bidders. It was only necessary to transfer fixtures from present school rooms to new Willard, but that would be some expense. Coal had been estimated as well as possible. Thought $5000 for incidentals large enough. The increase in the transportation item was to provide conveyance from Atlantic and Wollaston to High school and from West Quincy to John Hancock.

Councilman Jones opposed transportation and argued that it would be just as well for the children to walk. Moved to make amount $1000 instead of $2000.

Chairman Claflin cited other places (mostly towns) to show that cost was less in Quincy per head for schools.

Councilman Hammond believed it an injustice to provide conveyance to High from Wollaston and Atlantic, and not from West Quincy.

Councilman Little opposed reduction.

Councilman Robert was opposed to transportation.

Councilman Moxom moved to lay amendment on table, and reference of the whole matter to the Committee on Finance. After more debate in which Councilmen Fallon, Sherman and Powers favored transportation, and Councilman Newcomb and Wilde favored postponing, the amendment was laid on the table and estimates referred to Committee on Finance.

Public Hearing.

By assignment a public hearing was given at 8.15 on an order that interested parties show cause why street railway tracks should not be removed from Beale street.

W. G. A. Pattee, Esq., appeared for the Quincy & Boston Street Railway Co. He thought the petitioners should present their case first, and H. H. Faxon and H. T. Whitman agreed with him.

President Thompson thought by the wording of the order the petitioners were not called upon to do this.

Messrs. Pattee and Whitman entered their protest to this ruling.

The hearing then closed.

Upon motion of Councilman Bryant the order was referred to the Committee on Streets with instructions to take such action as it deemed advisable.

An opinion was read from City Solicitor Hayes that the order under which the hearing was held was a legal one.

Councilman Sherman entered his protest against any action by the Council, believing it should, instead, compel the company to run cars over the route.

Mayor's Estimates.

Mayor Fairbanks and Treasurer Adams submitted their estimates of the receipts and expenditures for the year 1891, the document being in print. Referred to Committee on Finance.

"The Mayor says "The expenditures of all the different departments for 1891 must be limited to our income, which is $257,480, —but $2,970 over the estimated income of last year. The increased appropriation for street lighting, $3,800; the increase in the pay of the fire department, $1,473; the increased appropriation for election expenses and State aid, forces the limiting of many requirements, and will require the greatest economy in many cases for the departments to complete the year within their appropriation."

Monthly Statements.

Treasurer Adams and Auditor Hall submitted their monthly statements which were referred to the Committee.

An order was subsequently introduced by Councilman Sherman and passed, that eighty copies of the latter statement be printed.

Petitions.

Malnati Bros. petitioned for license to run wire guy across Liberty street. Referred to Committee on Streets.

Councilman Warner presented the petition of John W. Faircloth and others for the improvement of Mt. Pleasant street. Referred to Committee on Streets.

S. M. Donovan and others petitioned for a crossing on School street, at the head of Franklin street. Referred to Committee on Streets.

Councilman Pratt presented petition of Frank C. Field and others for an electric light at the corner of Franklin and High streets. This was first referred to the Committee on Lights, but it was afterwards thought best to make a test case of it, as to whether more lights should be added this year, and the petition was laid on the table until the next meeting.

Reports.

The Committee on State Aid reported leave to withdraw on the petition of Isabella Cameron for State Aid. Accepted.

The Committee on Claims reported leave to withdraw on the claim of Terrance Keenan. Accepted.

The Committee on State Aid recommended $10 per month to Henry Talbot. Councilman Warner thought the amount should be larger, but as it was as high as allowed, the report was accepted.

The Committee on Public Buildings reported no action necessary on the request of the School Committee for larger blackboards in the Willard schoolhouse. Accepted.

Adams Street.

An order of Councilman Holden was adopted that the Commissioner report on the cost for the improvement of Adams street between Hancock street and the railroad bridge.

Election Thursday.

The Committee on Elections was instructed to meet Thursday evening to receive the election returns of the special election in Ward One.

Transferred.

A claim for rent for land occupied by the Houghs Neck chemical was taken from hands of Committee on Public Building and referred to Committee on Claims.

City Hall.

The order calling for plans for the remodelling of City Hall was passed to be engrossed.

Adjourned at 10.30.

School Committee's Meeting.

The School Committee held its regular meeting Tuesday evening, every member of the board being present.

Reporters Excluded.

The first business was in relation to admitting reporters at the meetings, which after some discussion was settled by adopting the vote of September, 1889, which was to the effect that the records should be open to the press.

Transportation.

Messrs. Sheahan, Hall and Roche, who were appointed at the last meeting to arrange for the transportation of the pupils, submitted the following report, which was adopted:

The committee on transportation beg leave to submit the following report—

In order to render more easy the comprehension of the work done, we have thought it useful to subdivide the subject as follows:

1. Transportation of West Quincy children to and from the John Hancock school.
2. Transportation of the Atlantic pupils to and from the High school.
3. Transportation of West Quincy, Wollaston and Quincy Point pupils to and from the High school.

Since the destruction of the Willard schoolhouse a certain number of West Quincy children have been obliged to walk to and from the John Hancock school, situated in South Quincy.

In some cases the distance is very great, and your committee has considered a journey of such length to be a serious source of exhaustion to these young pupils, as well as a positive menace to their health. Therefore, we have decided to convey to and from the John Hancock school at the cost of the city, all those scholars who live beyond a certain fixed limit, constituted by Cross street, from its origin at Common street to its junction at Willard street, and by the line of the O. C. R. R. track as it crosses West street. It was also decided to transport in the same way all those children who live on Common street to the north of its junction with Cross. The contract has been given to Mr. John Cashman, who has agreed to convey all entitled to the privilege at the rate of $7.50 per diem. This arrangement has been in operation for nearly a month, and we are glad to say that the work is done in an orderly and effective manner. The number of pupils to benefit by the measure is about 80.

The children who live in Atlantic, and who may be desirous of attending our high school, are obliged to perform a journey varying in length from two and a half to three and a half miles each way. Of course it is out of the question for them to think of doing this distance on foot, and in point of fact, they have been in the habit of riding to the centre of the city on the cars of the Old Colony railroad, thereby entailing upon their parents a considerable expense. Your committee has taken the ground that the infliction of this expense was unjust, that children living at a distance possessed the same right to the enjoyment of the higher education as did those living in the vicinity of the school, and that it would be painful to reflect that any one was hindered by pecuniary consideration from reaping the benefits of our public school system. That in fact a wise policy demanded the removal of every obstacle to the attainment of that end. Moreover, it seems to us that the citizens of Atlantic had already contributed in the shape of taxes their just share of the expense incurred by the city for the maintenance of our high school, and that to impose upon them the additional burden of paying railroad fares was inconsistent and illogical. We have therefore concluded to furnish to the children of the sixth ward free transportation to and from the high school during the entire school year, and we have completed arrangements with the Old Colony railroad by which tickets will be furnished each pupil at a cost of 23 1-8 cents per week. Number of pupils carried 21.

By virtue of considerations similar to those already urged, we have thought proper to furnish for the remainder of the term transportation both ways to those pupils who live in West Quincy, Wollaston and Quincy Point, at a distance of more than a mile from the High schoolhouse.

In case of pupils from West Quincy and the Point the result is accomplished by the purchase of tickets from the Quincy Electric Street Railway at the rate of three cents apiece each way, and their subsequent distribution to the pupils entitled thereto. The Wollaston children are furnished with tickets from the Old Colony R. R. Co. and at the same price as for those distributed to the pupils from Atlantic.

Number of pupils carried from West Quincy, 22; Wollaston, 18; Quincy Point, 2.

It will be noticed that as regards the children from the Atlantic district, we have fully decided that the arrangement now in operation shall continue for the whole year. In all other cases we have made no provision beyond the present school term, preferring to leave to the decision of the full board the question as to whether it would or would not be advantageous to scholars themselves and for the best interests of the city to continue the work of transportation beyond that period.

High School Course.

Messrs. Sheahan and Aldrich presented a course of studies for the High school, which was adopted. The course as mapped out provides for a complete four years' course, but pupils may take a three years' course if they so desire.

Do Doors Open Out.

By a vote of the board the various subcommittees were instructed to examine their several school buildings in regard to the outward opening of the doors, etc., and to act at once in any case that seemed urgent and make a report of their investigations at the next meeting of the board.

Quincy Post Office.

After having enjoyed the convenience of the post office in the next building for about five years, it makes us weary now to go way over to the Adams Building, but then we can forget all this when we contemplate the rich new quarters. All Quincy should be proud of its post office now.

There was considerable hustling Saturday and even Sunday, in getting the apartments ready, then in moving over all the mail matter.

There was some delay Monday in distributing the mail, occasioned by the discontinuance of most of the call boxes, renumbering others, etc., etc., but the public kindly overlook all this.

The first purchase was made by George A. Abbott, the gentleman who superintended the work of fitting up the office.

Mr. C. P. Tirrell bought the first stamp.

Dr. Hallowell mailed the first letter inside and also cashed the first money order.

Mr. J. L. Johnson sent the first money order.

Mr. M. W. Frolund bought the first postal note and sent the first registered letter.

Mrs. M. T. Curtis received the first registered letter.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., March 4, 1891.

The size of State grants to institutions appeared in some figures which Auditor Ladd sent to the House on Thursday to cover the period from 1860 to 1890. The total for the State's outright benevolence reaches the large sum of $5,617,243. Some of the most interesting items are these: Institute of Technology, $661,674; Agricultural College, $677,012; Agricultural College scholarships, $80,000; agricultural experiment station, $99,250; Museum of Zoology, $355,707; Tufts College, $50,000; Williams College, $100,000; Amherst College, $27,500; Wesleyan Academy, $47,298; Mt. Holyoke College and Seminary, $40,000; Worcester County Institute of Industrial Science, $100,000; Perkins Institute for the Blind, $891,600; Asylum for the Deaf and Dumb, $809,258; School for the Feeble Minded, $787,133; the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary, $249,000; the Soldiers' Home, $200,000; the hospital cottages for children at Baldwinsville, $95,000; the Homœpathic Hospital, $120,000.

The oleo bill passed its last stage in the House Thursday afternoon, having previously passed the Senate. In neither branch did it receive a word of debate. This shows the effect of the abandonment of opposition on the part of the oleo makers. As the bill stands it is expected to protect the consumers who buy of retailers, the oleo makers thinking that they can take care of their interests under the original package law.

The House on Friday admitted a batch of petitions from the Nationalist League of Massachusetts and they served to embody the leading features of Nationalist doctrine, so far as at present evolved, relating to legislation. They ask for the adoption of the Swiss "referendum," which I understand to be the method of submitting all legislative acts to the people for their approval, and the validity of the acts depends upon that approval. They ask for a law to permit cities to build and rent dwellings for the people. They want an equitable system of minority representation. They would change the compulsory school age by advancing it to 17 years and they would compel children to attend throughout the entire school year, instead of thirty weeks of the forty as now. Manual training in the public schools is another of the things they desire. Permission for cities and towns to engage in the business of making gas and electric light is desired and they also ask that cities may establish industries for the benefit of the unemployed. The matter of erecting buildings has been before the Legislature lately half a dozen times and has always been defeated. A few years ago some excellent Springfield people asked for permission to establish industries for the unemployed, the city to bear the expense, but the Legislature refused and the idea has not appeared since, till now.

Both branches voted to adjourn over the March town meetings on Monday.

The House stands on its dignity and by 147 to 23 has defeated the bill to prevent the offering of any more West End dinners to members of the Legislature, or the offering of any other entertainment to members of the Legislature by persons or corporations pecuniarily interested in pending legislation. Now it is for the people of the State to form their judgment upon the facts. Briefly the case is this: The West End investigation last year, judging by after development, called down popular condemnation upon the legislative practice of receiving entertainment from such lavish petitioners. Gov. Russell, in his inaugural, said: "The only remedy seems to be an absolute prohibition of such entertainment." So the Committee on Rules took up the matter and it was revealed in the House debate that every man of them, Democrat and Republican, was opposed to any law whatever, and it was said that Gov. Russell was unable to recommend any other remedy than that in his inaugural.

But views shifted later and by seven to six it was voted to report a bill applying to the Legislature. The absent member added his dissent afterwards, so the committee stood seven to seven. When the bill came up in the House the dissenters of the committee moved a substitute bill to apply to the Governor, judges, members of congress and to all members of city governments and to town officers. It was done to ridicule and defeat the pending bill and this was tacitly admitted in the debate. Politics was brought in. Members asserted that Gov. Russell introduced the matter for sake of politics and that he was as liable to criticism as any of the Legislature, for last year as counsel for the New England Conservatory of Music he had invited the members to the reception, concert and collation there. Mr. Rideout of Cambridge said he had served in the Cambridge aldermen with William E. Russell and Russell did not control his morals then and would not now. The more they talked, the more evident it appeared that very few members wanted the bill. They dwelt upon the dignity of the House, and said it was not necessary to pass a law to restrict themselves. Finally they followed Mr. Mellen of Worcester and by the above vote postponed the whole matter to Dec. 1. This date was taken as a mere parlimentary device, for the smart, new Committee on Rules has obliterated the motion to postpone indefinitely, so it has no place in the House procedure.

The Governor sent to the House on Tuesday a message recommending action to prevent the introduction of contagious diseases into the State from the filthy tenement houses in New York where ready made clothing is prepared for the Boston market. An investigation in New York has been made by the State district police and a horrible condition of affairs has been disclosed among the Russian and Polish Jews and Portuguese who are mostly the makers of this sort of clothing. Matters are bad enough in Boston and Cambridge, but not as bad as in New York.

Wednesday afternoon there was another act in the drama of the entertainment bill. Speaker Barrett came down from the chair and told the House plainly that they could not afford to let their action stand postponing the bill to Dec. 1. The fall election proved plainly that the people believed that something was wrong in the West End business. The members knew there was an evil influence exerted and the people believed it. They must acknowledge it and do something to remedy it. So by an almost unanimous vote they put on the table, at his motion, his first motion to reconsider, and so the matter can be taken up at any time.

Wednesday afternoon came the debate and vote on biennials and the vote without any debate on the poll tax amendment. Biennials was defeated by 116 to 101, (Quincy and Bicknell against and Burke absent) and two pairs—not the necessary two-thirds for it. The poll tax amendment was carried by 161 to 55 (Quincy and Bicknell for it and Burke absent) and two pairs—more than two-thirds. The "yes" vote on biennials comprised ninety-six Republicans, twenty Democrats, one Prohibitionist and one Independent. The "no" vote was twenty-nine Republicans and seventy-four Democrats. The "yes" vote on the poll tax was ninety Republicans and ninety-three Democrats. The "no" vote was fifty-four Republicans, one Democrat and Prohibitionist and Independent.

By twenty to thirteen the Senate adopted the memorial to Congress for election of United States senators by the people. Democrats and two Republicans were for it. The "noes" were all Republican.

Larger Hall Wanted.

To the Publishers of the Patriot:

DEAR SIR:—Hearing from one of the High School graduates of '91, that the high school reception was going to be held at Faxon Hall and that the graduates were only going to have tickets enough for their ma's and pa's, I would like to put a good word in the PATRIOT for the people who are going to get left. Now these scholars are not going to graduate but once, and why not for the honor of the graduating class of the Quincy high school and for the school itself, have this would-be reception in a hall large enough to accommodate as many of the intimate friends of the scholars as would like to attend. For the last few years the graduating class has been in the habit of having a high school reception and it would indeed seem odd if this class did not do as well as its predecessors. The only hall which we deem suitable for this occasion is the Coliseum, and we fail to see why it cannot be used.

Hoping this will meet with the approval of many who would like to attend.

SATURDAY, MAR. 7, 1891.

The Story Told Anew.

In the dusk and down a lane
  Two walked, hand in hand, together;
Blew the wind and fell the rain,
  Little heeded they the weather.
Cold March winds might storm about,
  Warmth within mocked cold without.

Had the road been paved with gold,
  They had never seen a shimmer;
Had the stars left heaven's high fold,
  Night to them had grown no dimmer.
Earth, unto its widest hem,
  Consisted of four feet for them!

What said he to make her start,
  Flush and glow with a sudden pleasure?
What could cause the woman's heart
  Then to beat a faster measure?
Why did eyelids, prone to rise,
  Hide the light of glowing eyes?

'Twas the story told anew,
  Old, but never antiquated;
Just the same words—just a few—
  Just the case so often stated—
Just the same in every wise,
  As once was told in Paradise.

Household Receipts.

ROAST LAMB. Rub a nice leg of lamb with salt and pepper, lay in a baking pan with a little water and a few slices of onion; when done, in about two hours' steady cooking take the meat out and thicken the drippings (after taking off the most of the grease) with flour, to be used as a sauce.

ROLL JELLY CAKE. Three eggs, and one cup each of sugar and flour; add sugar, two tablespoonfuls of water and a pinch of salt; lastly, very gradually stir in the flour, in which has been sifted a heaping teaspoonful of baking powder. Light brown sugar is best for roll cake.

BOILED RICE The addition of lemon juice to the water will increase the whiteness and help the grains to separate, and if lemon juice or white vinegar be put into the water for boiling fish the scum is thrown up, and the color of the fish is greatly improved.

APPLE JELLY FOR CAKES. Peel and grate two large sour apples; add to them the grated rind and the juice of one lemon, a small pice of butter, one cupful of sugar, the white of one egg; cook carefully and thoroughly, and when cool spread between cake.

COOKIES. Put 1 cup of sugar in a bowl, beat 1 cup of butter with it until creamed, add 1 cup sweet milk, 2 eggs well beaten; flavor to taste, in another dish stir 1 cup of sugar and 1 of sour cream together, add 1 teaspoon of soda; now beat well, then add to the ingredients in first dish and put in 2 cups of flour, in which has been stirred 2 teaspoons baking powder; use more flour to roll out, not kneading any more than you are obliged to; have them about ¼ inch thick, cut out in squares with a slash half the length; bake quick.

TEA BREAD. Three eggs, one tablespoonful of sugar, one coffee-cup of flour, two coffee cups of Indian meal, 2 1-2 cups of buttermilk, one teaspoonful of soda and one teaspoonful of lard.

GOOD COMMON DOUGHNUTS. One quart of flour, one egg, one cupful each of sugar and sweet milk, two teaspoonfuls of baking powder, a pinch of salt, spice to taste, and fry in hot lard.

Bent whalebones may be restored to shape by soaking in warm water a few hours, or by warming over a lamp or fire.

Anecdotes.

Mrs. A.: "I see you have got a new servant girl."

Mrs. B.: "Yes, I make it a point to get a new one every month."

Mrs. A.: "But that must be very inconvenient."

Mrs. B.: "Yes, but there is nothing going on in this town that I don't know all about it."

Mrs. O'Harrity: "Now put in another quart."

Grocer (putting in second quart); "Why didn't you ask for a half-gallon at first, and have done with it?"

Mrs. O'Harrity: "Och, bless yez sowl! One quart is for meself, and t'other is fer Mrs. Casey."

"George," said the bride, "I seem to be constantly hearing the sweetest music. I wonder what it means?"

"It means," said the practical groom, "that the feller who sold me that wedding ring for a plain gold band worked off a brass band on me."

Teacher—"I don't see why you can't understand this rule in arithmetic, Johnny. It didn't take me five minutes to understand it when it was first explained to me."

Johnny—"Perhaps your teacher explained it to you better,"

Uncle Jack returns from a long walk, and, being somewhat thirsty, drinks from a tumbler he finds on the table. Enter his little niece Alice, who instantly sets up a cry of despair.

Uncle Jack: "What's the matter, Allie?"

Alice (weeping): "You've drinked up my aquarium, and you've swallowed my free pollywogs."—Harvard Lampoon.

"I am afraid, madam," said a gentleman who was looking for a country board, "that the house is too near the station to be pleasant."

"It is a little noisy," assented the landlady, "but from the front veranda one has such a fine view of people who miss the trains."

A reader asks: "What is the meaning of "E. Pluribus Unum?" The modern definition is, "Use Brussels soap. It's economical."

☞ The Massachusetts Society of the Sons of the American Revolution, which embraces in its membership all male descendants, however remote, of soldiers, sailors and recognized patriots who rendered service in the struggle for independence, has enrolled the names of twenty-one "own sons" of soldiers who served during 1775 to 1783. The oldest of these, Oliver Lawrence Wheeler, of Ashby, Mass., is 96 years and 7 months old, and the youngest, Elbridge G. Snow, of Fitchburg, is fifty-six. This list of "own sons" is in excess of the combined list from all other States. A society of female descendants will soon be organized in Massachusetts. It is estimated that there are more than one hundred thousand descendants in Massachusetts, and the Registrar of the Society, L. L. Tarbell, of 279 Columbus avenue, Boston, will send an interesting document to all such who will favor him with their address.

Outside of the manufacturers themselves few persons realize the vast amount of money expended each year for carpet samples. A good judge thinks that the samples that go out of the Philadelphia mills alone cost $500,000 annually, with but a small proportion returned by sale of samples.

After a Buffalo fire a case of lamp chimneys that had come down from the third story were found unbroken.

Teachings of Science.

It would require a long time and much study for any one to learn what is well known by anatomists and physiologists respecting the nervous system to say nothing of the theories and discoveries which still lack demonstration. The brain especially, but also the spinal cord, has many curious and delicate parts which perform a great variety of functions. There are myriads of cells which originate actions and receive impressions, and as many minute tubes which convey impressions and forces to and from the cells to the different parts of the body. The details respecting the kinds of action are too numerous to state; and it must answer our present purpose to say, that not only every organ of the body has a nervous supply, but every minute part of a living tissue, performing any action, having any power of motion or capability of feeling—every part constructing blood corpuscles or effecting secretions—is furnished with a little nerve fibre controlling its action; and wrong state in the cells of the brain or the fibres of the nerves causes wrong actions more or less marked, in the parts influenced by them.

But besides this, and what is of much more importance in relation to our subject, the brain is the organ of the mind. Everything we call mind, every feeling, emotion, disposition, impulse and desire; all ideas, knowledge, reason and thought, and all purpose, determination and will the power to feel, the power to think, and the power to act—all that pertains to our character or conduct, shows inself, or is expressed through and by the brain; and character and actions are influenced and determined by the conditions of the brain. Anything that acts upon the brain and the nerves—the appendages and servants of the brain—changing their conditions, changes the conditions and actions not only of the body but of its immaterial inhabitant, the mind.

Now, not only the most characteristic but by far the most marked action of alcohol is upon the nervous system—upon the brain, the spinal cord, and the nerves.

Literary Notes.

The Arena for March contains a remarkably varied and inviting table of contents. The contributions are marked by deep thought, and represent a reflex of the best ideas of the day, both among liberal and conservative thinkers.

The Forum begins it's eleventh volume with the March number. Throughout the whole period of the ten volumes now finished, the publishers announce that there has been an uninterrupted increase of their business. So great has been the growth of the magazine, that it is necessary to procure larger office room than the quarters now occupied by The Forum, which, three years ago, seemed large enough for an indefinate period.

The Century for March has a third installment of the famous Talleyrand Memoirs and deals with Napoleon Bonaparte, Josephine and the Emperor Alexander. A charming feature of this number is a curious story by Edith Robinson called "Penhallow." Dr. Eggleston's serial "The Faith Doctor," is continued, as well as "Colonel Carter of Cartersville," and there is a strictly true story, "The Mystery of the Sea," by Prof. Buttolph, and a humorous skit, "The Utopian Pointer," by David Dodge. Mr. Rockhill gives the last instalment of his account of journeyings through Eastern Tibet and Central China.

Toilettes is a handsome monthly devoted exclusively to ladies' and children's fashions. The illustrations for March are very pretty and original, published at 184 Cherry street, New York.

The Ladies' Home Journal contains many good features in the March number as usual. Mrs. P. T. Barnum's discussion, "Moths of Modern Marriages" is unusually brilliant, for a first publication. The sketch of Mrs. Cladstone, by an American girl and the excellent articles by Mrs. Jenness-Miller and Miss Hooper on dressmaking as a profession; Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney's brilliant serial, "A Golden Gossip"; Mary E. Wilkin's story, "A Rustic Comedy;" suggestive articles by Rose Terry Cooke and Miss Le Garde on self-support and gymnastics for girls, are some of the features. Published at Philadelphia.

In the St. Nicholas for March, there is nothing that an intelligent boy or girl cannot understand and appreciate, and yet all the contents are unhackneyed and, in the best sense of the word, artistic. The serials by J. T. Trowbridge and Noah Brooks are sturdy and healthful. "Effie's Visit to Cloudland" will be welcomed by parents who wish to find stories to read to their insatiable audiences, and the same purpose may be served by "Huz and Buz," "Pauline and the Policeman," and "Good-Bye." Older children have not been slighted, and they will appreciate "Cæsar and Pompey"; "A Polar Bear for a Jailer," "Out of Childhood," and the pleasant English story, "Rhoda's Visit."

The March Wide Awake bristles with good things, from Margaret Sidney's inimitable Pepper Serial to Miss Poulsson's Scandinavian Witch Story; from Oscar Fay Adams' illustrated visit to Winchester College to hear the boys sing the famous old Commencement song, "Dulce Domum," to Mrs. Ormsbee's graphic account of "How Grandmother's Spoons Were Made;" these and many more stories, poems, pictures and articles give a wide range of first class family reading. Wide Awake is $2.40 a year. D. Lothrop Company, Publishers, Boston.

Romance. The New York Story Club is making not only a general collection of stories, but collections that illustrate special interesting phases of American life; for the purpose of the club, is not simply to provide entertainment, but to make and encourage genuine contributions to American literature. The March number is very interesting.

Boston Amusements.

Hollis Street Theatre.

Following the Kendals the New York comedy success "Blue Jeans" comes to the Hollis, March 9th for a brief stay. It is a play to suit all tastes, being a mingling of fun, tenderness, and excitement; a play pure and enjoyable. It was a great success in New York and will be warmly welcomed in Boston, as it is written by Joseph Arthur the author of that popular play, "The Still Alarm."

Boston Museum.

The new plays at the Museum bid fair to be as popular as their predecessors, and large audience have been the rule the past week. The play of the evening is "Sunlight and Shadow" but as the advertisement announces a delicious and cheering "Cup of Tea" is presented first to get the audience in a cheerful frame of mind; doubtless every one is on hand promptly to witness the performance of the little comedy.

Boston.

"Yon Yonson" is announced as a great success and it will be presented at the Boston theatre next week.

They tell you of geraniums in California that grow so tall that you have to go up into the window of the second story to gather the flowers. And a woman in Michigan has a geranium four feet and five inches high.

Feed Children Well.

Shirley Dare says in an article on what our children shall eat that the ignorance and mistakes in feeding children appear little short of diabolical in their intents and effects. It is a far cry from the stupid, untaught mother who feeds her nursing baby at the table with sausages, baked beans and pickle, varied with sips of strong coffee to the painfully well-read mother, who nearly banishes pleasure from her children's lives for fear of possible injury. Fifty years ago and more the idea prevailed that porridge of flour and milk was remarkably wholesome for children. A more abominable mess, both for taste and nourishment, is hardly advisable, and I have a private belief that the melancholy dyspepsia of memoirs of the time was cultivated by this diet. Dickens was undersized all his life for want of generous food when a growing, craving boy—and he might well have lived a score of years longer if he had banked a little more fresh air, fun, beefsteak and pudding when he was a boy in the blacking factory. I know how absolutely fathomless and insistent a boy's appetite is and a girl's may be, when growing, and how, devouring a Thanksgiving dinner daily at one o'clock they are in the pangs of starvation before six. But all this food is as much strength put in bank for them against middle life, when they begin to feel the want of it.

NORFOLK, SS. SUPREME JUDICIAL COURT.

MARGARET A. BABCOCK,
vs.
ROBERT LANE.

PETITION TO SETTLE TITLE.

To the Honorable the Justices of the Supreme Judicial Court, sitting within and for the County of Norfolk:

RESPECTFULLY Represents your petitioner, Margaret A. Babcock, that she is and for a long time has been the owner of a piece or parcel of land situated on Willard Street in Quincy, in said County of Norfolk, which said land is bounded and described as follows, to wit:—

Westerly on Willard Street about twelve (12) rods: southerly on land formerly of George McCullen about eight (8) rods: easterly on land of J. W. Robinson about fourteen (14) rods: northerly on land formerly of William F. Johnson about eight rods, or however otherwise bounded, containing about one hundred and four (104) square rods, more or less:

That said property was conveyed to her by a deed dated August 15, 1877, from Charles F. Babcock, Margaret H. Babcock, Josiah Babcock, and Flora M. Babcock, being the heirs-at-law of the late Josiah Babcock of Milton, said deed being recorded in the Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 495, folio 54: that the late Josiah Babcock came into possession of said premises through one Joseph Corliss by deed dated October 22nd, 1849, recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 190, folio 182: that the record title of said property now owned by your petitioner is encumbered by an undischarged mortgage given by said Joseph Corliss, while he was owner, to one Robert Lane, for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars and interest, dated August 3, 1849, for the term of three years, said mortgage deed being recorded in Norfolk Registry of Deeds, libro 189, folio 153: that since the said deed of August 15, 1877 to your petitioner, your petitioner has had possession of said premises: that the possession of the several owners and occupants of said premises has been continous and uninterrupted for a period of more than twenty years since the expiration of the time limited in said mortgage for the performance of the conditions thereof, namely, August 3, 1852: that no payment has been made within twenty years on the debt secured by said mortgage, and no other act has been done by any one of the occupants in recognition of the valid existence of said mortgage: that said mortgage constitutes a cloud upon her title to said premises: that the respondent is the mortgagee named in said undischarged mortgage and the only party known to your petitioner interested in said mortgage, and that your petitioner does not know the whereabouts of said mortgagee.

Your petitioner therefore prays that due notice be given to the respondent and all other parties interested, by publication or otherwise, as may be ordered, of this petition: that a hearing be had, and that the Court will order a decree to be entered which shall set forth the facts as herein alleged and the finding of the Court in accordance therewith, to the end that said decree may be duly recorded in the registry of deeds as provided by Statutes of 1882, Chapter 237, and that thereafter no action shall be brought by any person to enforce said mortgage.

MARGARET A. BABCOCK,
By her Attorneys,
GASTON & WHITNEY.

A Literary Solution.

We stood in the book store together
She chatting of this and of that;
My heart kept time with the feather
That clung to her Gainsborough hat.
On Stevenson, Stockton and Kipling
And poets galore she enthused;
But how to propose to her, rippling
With music and laughter, I mused.

On this one and that one she tarried
To label their place on the shelf;
"This 'How to be Happy Though Married;'
Absurd?" and I thought so myself.
"But those who have tried it may surely Be trusted to know," I replied.
"I tell you," she said, "it is purely
The tone of the age to deride."

"The task for solution," I ventured,
"Is how to be married though poor;"
I know that I ought to be censured—
She looking so sweet and demure.
Her voice was so low, 'twas the border
Of thought where it breaks into words;
"We might," she said, "solve this in order
To prove that the book is absurd."

Miscellany.

Minding Her Own Business.

"Me and Squire Bagshot, we're go'in' into partnership together," said Miss Naomi Nutting.

"Eh? What?" cried the Widow Scarsby, hastily adjusting her ear trumpet. "You a-thinkin' o' gettin' married at this time o' day!"

Miss Naomi gave a sniff of exceedingly great derision.

"Who's talkin' o' gettin' married?" said she. "Not I. Nor, I guess the squire. We're outen our first childhood, and we ain't got to our second, I calculate. Not yet."

The Widow Scareby looked disappointed.

"Then," said she, "what do you mean?"

"Why," exclaimed Miss Naomi, "the squire he's leased the old farm. I'd got to let it to somebody. What between the taxes and the interest, and the repairs and all, it was too much for a woman to look arter. But the cows and the poultry, and all is to remain, and I'm to run the dairy and egg business. Ten per cent. commission I'm to have, and the use of the old house. And I've set out a lot of new strawberry roots, and some of the offshoots of Hester Brine's sweet smellin' English violets, and I'm going to earn my own livin', if I be a woman!"

"Vi'lets!" repeated Mrs. Scarsby, "and strawberries! John hain't no faith in that sort of thing."

"It don't matter to me whether he has or not," curtly observed Miss Nutting.

"A woman never yet made farmin' pay."

"Anyhow," said Miss Nutting, "I mean to have a try at it. My expenses won't be much, that's one comfort."

"Better give up the notion," said Mrs. Scarsby, slowly shaking her head.

"Not if I know it," said Naomi. "I'm pretty certain I can make good butter, and I always took natural to hens and chickens. And I know I can market them strawberries at the summer hotels on Cherry brook, and English violets brings fifty cents a dozen at the New York florists in January and February."

"You're runnin' a great risk!" sighed Mrs. Scarsby, in genuine Job's-comforter accents.

"There's always the poorhouse left, if I don't succeed," sarcastically remarked Naomi.

And Mrs. Scarsby went away to tell her news throughout the whole neighborhood.

"Upon my word," said Mrs. Dr. Plumb, "the woman has pluck! But of course she won't succeed; women never do."

"I never was so flat in all my life," said Mrs. Scarsby, "as I was when I heerd Naomi say she was going into partnership with Squire Bagshot. I s'posed, of course, she was goin' to marry him."

"Well, I don't know why she shouldn't," said Mrs. Plumb. "The squire ain't young but he's a likely man enough."

He marry Naomi Nutting!" said Mrs. Scarsby. "A poverty-stricken old maid, with one foot in the poor house."

"Folks used to say your John was partial to her," shrewdly observed Mrs. Plumb.

"That's all a mistake," said Mrs. Scarsby.

And she took herself and her ear-trumpet off to the next house, while little Ellie Price, Mrs. Plumb's bound girl, who had been listening through the dumb waiter, breathlessly scampered to the grocery for an ounce of powdered cinnamon which she had been told half an hour ago to bring, and there informed Mrs. Peppersauce, as a profound secret, that Miss Naomi Nutting and Squire Bagshot were about to be married.

"I don't believe it," said Mrs. Peppersauce.

"I heard it with my own ears," said Ellie, glowing all over with the importance of her news."

"An old maid like that!" said Mrs. Peppersauce scornfully.

"She ain't thirty yet," said Ellie, "I heard misses tell Mrs. Scarsby so."

Ill news, they say, spreads fast; so does good news. Which of these heads Squire Bagshot's engagement comes under is hard to specify, but certain it is that the morsel of gossip spread like wildfire through Cherry village.

"Me engaged to Naomi Nutting," said the squire. "Well, it's ths first I've heard of it."

"Naomi going to marry that old widower!" said John Scarsby. "What nonsense. You told me yourself, mother, that she denied it up and down."

"Yes," said Mrs. Scarsby, a little doubtfully, "but that's what they always do. It would be a good thing for Naomi Nutting."

"I'll never believe it," said John.

The old love affair between him and Naomi Nutting was dead and gone long ago, but something in the prevalent atmosphere seemed to fan the faint spark of its ashes into new life. John Scarsby remembered how black and bright her eyes once were, and what a trim figure she had. While the squire, meditating on the perfect, dazzling cleanliness of Naomi's dairy, and the efficiency with which she had set out the violet roots and the strawberry creepers, said to himself:

"I don't know but that I might do worse To be sure, she's a poor solitary, friendless creetur, without any property except that old mortgage-ridden farm. But I can't get no hired girl short of eleven dollars a month, and it is sort o' lonesome settin' on the stoop of evenin' all alone. She's been brought up economical, too, and won't want to spend more money than she can help. That's a great thing."

And the squire brushed his lank hair more carefully than ever over the glossy dome of his bald cranium, and considered seriously the propriety of dyeing his grizzly beard.

"Mother," said John Scarsby, that day, "it isn't right for you to do all the housework by yourself. It's too much for you."

"La, John, I do hope you ain't thinkin' of hirin' a help!" exclaimed Mrs. Scarsby in dismay. "Of all shiftless, idle, wasteful, things—"

"We've got to do something, mother," said John. "I can't let you work yourself out."

It was true, John Scarsby had said the same thing time and again to his mother; but he said it now with genuine earnestness, looking at her as he did so, and secretly wondering how he should break to her the tidings of an impending daughter-in-law. And Naomi Nutting, of all persons, the woman whom Mrs. Scarsby designated as "that poor, forlorn old maid."

John was a brave man, but there are more kinds of courage than one.

Mrs. Scarsby cried over the butter beans she was cutting up for dinner.

"I won't have a help in the house," thought she. "If John really wants a woman around, why can't he get married? I don't know no smarter girl than Naomi Nutting. I've a great mind to go an' see if she can't break that 'ere contract with Squire Bagshot. I wish I dared to speak right out to John about it. He used to like Naomi, but men are queer."

Naomi had just come in from weeding her late onion-patch the next evening, when the squire arrived, all in his best.

"Good evening, squire," said Miss Nutting. "Sit down till I light the lamp."

"Don't light it," said the squire, sheepishly. "I'm partial to the twilight."

"I ain't," said Naomi. "I mostly like to see what I'm doing. You've come about business, I suppose!"

"Ahem—yes," admitted the squire. Although he had told himself all day long that Naomi Nutting would certainly jump at his offer, he could not subdue a certain nervousness at the last moment. "Very important business!"

Tat-tat-tat-t-t-t! came a knock on the panels of the lilac-shaded front door.

John Scarsby, arriving close on the heels of the squire, had perceived necessity of immediate action.

He was flushed, and breathed hard with rapid walking, but he had screwed his courage up.

"Naomi," said he, "can I speak to you for one minute?"

Naomi, holding the lamp in one hand, stared hard at him.

"I'm engaged, just now?"

"Engaged?"

"Squire Bagshot is here."

"I won't keep you long," said John, "I only want one word."

"Anything happened?" questioned Naomi.

"No; but—" John drew a quick breath of vexation and embarrassment. "Will you hear me out, Naomi?"

The squire in the front room cleared his throat loudly, as Naomi conducted John into the back kitchen.

"Now, then," said she, "what is it?"

Did ever lover woo maiden under such discouraging circumstances?

John fixed his eyes on the copper boiler, and blurted out his tender confession at once.

It was an awkward proceeding, but it was inevitable.

"Naomi," he said, "I want a wife. Will you have me?"

"No, thankee, John," said Miss Nutting.

John stared at her and uttered a gasp.

"What did you say?" stammered he,

"I said no!"

"I'm too late, am I?" he uttered despairingly.

"Well, yes, you are."

"Hadn't you better think it over?"

"Well, it wouldn't be no use."

John went away completely dumbfounded and Naomi went back to the squire.

"What business could that young man possibly have with you, Naomi?" asked the squire, a little fretfully.

"It was private," said Naomi composedly.

"Naomi," said Mr. Bagshot, plunging headlong into the subject, "I'm thinking of gettin' married."

"Are you?" said Naomi, somewhat amazed.

"I'm tired of livin' solitary and alone, and I don't know of nobody I like better than you," added Bagshot.

"Much obliged to you, I'm sure," said Naomi.

"Do you think you could learn to love me?" said the squire, his hard features galvanized into unwonted tenderness.

"I dunno whether I could or not," said Naomi, "but I don't mean to try."

"Eh?" jerked out the squire.

"I'm engaged already," explained Naomi.

"To that shiftless young Scarsby?"

"He ain't particularly shiftless as I know of," observed Naomi. "But it ain't to him, as it happens."

"If you're really engaged," said the squire, of whose character delicacy was by no means a prominent feature, "what on earth are you running the dairy business for?"

"To earn money, to be sure, said Naomi. "I'm to marry a rich man and I don't choose to go to him empty-handed, or without a decent wardrobe, such as other women have."

"Who is it?" still further demanded the squire.

"Well, I don't mind telling you, since you ask me up and down," said Naomi. Him that owns the New Mountain iron works, Joseph Alden.

The squire made a little gurgling sound, as if he were ineffectually trying to swallow something. Joseph Alden, the handsome, middle-aged Englishman, the best catch in Cherry county, engaged to Naomi Nutting, whom he—Squire Bagshot—had mentally characterized as "a poor, solitary, friendless creetur!"

"Well," said he, heavily rising, "I s'pose I'd better go."

"I don't know as you'll gain anything by staying," Naomi coolly remarked.

The squire was driven to hire a stout Vermont woman at eleven dollars a month. Mrs. Scarsbury still continues to do her own housework, in spite of the remonstrances of her son John. Naomi Nutting does as she did before—minds her own business. And the violet and strawberry business has proved a success and the wedding day is fixed.

How to Clean Blankets.

If bound with colored ribbons, rip them off, and thus prevent the color from running into the blankets while they are wet. Prepare the following mixture in the forenoon: Shave a pound bar and a half of any good laundry soap into a thin small shavings. Entirely melt it in a saucepan of water on the fire. Strain the melted soap through a colander into a tub half-full of luke-warm water. Add half a pound of powdered borax and a table-spoonful of molasses. Thoroughly stir the mixture; put in the equal of one double blanket, and notice as you do so where the stains are. Leave the blanket simply soaking, well covered in this nice soft suds, for nearly twenty-four hours. Next morning look for the stains. If they are not all soaked out, pat them and gently wave them in the water, but never rub them. Rubbing makes wool harsh like felt. When the stains are gone, press what water you easily can from them, and lift them into a tub of clear rinsing water. Wave the blankets in that till most of the suds is gone, then put them into another rinsing water. Sometimes two rinsings are enough to clear them. If a third is needed it may be blued a little if one likes. Have a strong clothes line stretched as tight as possible out in the yard. Strong sun is apt to fade the colored borders of blankets, so choose a shady, breezy place to dry them in. If you can take them out in a tub, do so, otherwise lift them, saturated with water, into a basket, and carry them full of water to the clothes line. Hang them exactly through the middle lengthwise on the line; then the colored borders of the blanket will hang vertically. See that the fold of the blanket is slightly wrinkled, that is, a very little full, as the blanket lies over the line else the middle of the blanket will be found to dry stretched longer than the edges. The blankets after this process will be clean, soft, and not shrunken.

How to Dress in March.

There is a curious prejudice among many against the overshoe, and yet the despised rubber is an essential protection against the melting snow and slush of March. The thickest sole of the heaviest walking boot absorbs enough moisture to dampen and chill the feet, and yet nothing is more perilous than sitting in a warm room with rubbers on, excepting going about the ordinary house in slippers. Draughts hug the floor and lie in wait for the unwary. The clinging of wet skirts against the ankles is a fruitful source of aches and pains. Leggins of leather water-proof or rubber will obviate this trouble in a degree, while a skirt of flannel, faced with a rubber band, avoids the danger altogether.

While the feet are kept warm, the head should be cool. The hardiest nations in the world are those which cover the throat and head lightly. Reserve the fur hat and muffler for the sleigh ride, and banish them from the promenade. Catarrh and throat troubles are often caused by the introduction of foreign particles into the nasal passages, so wear a thick veil as a safeguard against the dust which March winds bear on their wings; and, lastly, avoid injudicious dressing for social events. Evening costumes for men and women are much thinner than those habitually worn during the day; and care should be taken to increase correspondingly the outer and under-garments. It is a trifle presumptuous to discard flannels, and then after hours, in a hot ball-room, to put on a creation of lace and ribbon for a drive or walk in the night air of March.—The Ladies' Home Journal.

A Corpse With $5000 in Jewelry.

The largest amount of jewelry known to be in a single grave was buried in Greenwood Cemetery several years. The undertaker who had charge of the funeral protested against it, but was severely snubbed for his interference. The family had its way, and in that grave is buried fully $5,000 worth of diamonds, with which the body was decked when prepared for burial. Sometimes, though not often, families who desire to bury their dead in the clothing worn in life, in evening or wedding dresses, for instance, substitute less costly imitations for the jewelry worn in life, partly from motives of thrift and partly from a superstitious fear that anything taken off a body when it is ready for the tomb will bring ill-luck to future wearers. This superstitution and a desire to prevent gossip are powerful inducements for the burial of jewelry, for that class who have "swell" funerals care less for the money value of the articles than for the danger of being criticised by social rivals.—New York Press.

The Country Newspaper.

If you have anything to sell that commands trade outside of your own city, use the country newspaper.

In the country newspaper you have a reliable and effective friend that does its mission at more family firesides than do many of the metropolitan dailies.

In the country weeklies the marriage bells toll more joyfully than in the great city papers, and when the columns of such a home paper tells us of some humble person has gone from the world we read with tears, for he was our neighbor and friend.

The country newspaper is not only a business guide, but it is a pulpit of morals for the entire community and country in which it is published. It is a kind of public rostrum where the affairs of State are considered; it is a supervisor of the streets and roads; it is a social friend, a promoter of friendship and good will.—Printer's Ink.

Bridget: "I am going to lave yez, mum." Mistress: "What for?" Bridget: "Because the washin' is too hard to do, mum, widout yez buy me some Brussels soap to do it wid, mum."

One of the most comfortable apartments on the Alva, Mr. W. K. Vanderbilt's yacht, is the children's playroom and nursery, just in front of the bedrooms on the first lower deck. It is padded with plush to prevent the children from receiving injuries by being thrown about when the vessel rolls.

A Japanese Lunatic.

She was eighteen years of age. She had been insane a year when I first saw her. During the great distress, early in the Summer of 1890, we were distributing rice to two or three hundred of the poor at our station. A mother came for food. She told us that she had a mad daughter at home. Some of my assistants went to investigate the case. It was a wretched, pagan home, one dark, miserable room—all the home they had for the mother, two sons and this poor, mad girl! The lunatic was kept in a cage, a sort of closet with bars. When I first visited her the spectacle before me was pitiful in the extreme. Yet the girl's face, notwithstanding its wildness, had something sweet and pathetic in its expression. She went from side to side of her cage, like a poor, wild animal, throwing herself from time to time against the bars, or trying to climb up on them. She was without clothing, for she would keep nothing about her, but occasionally a piece of matting which she would draw around herself.

Sometimes she would become so violent that the police would have to be called in. Finally they visited her at regular intervals during the day. What could be done? That one question pressed on us. We could not leave that poor, caged child—for she was little more—to a life in that dark, stifling closet. But this case brought out the fact that there are no asylums for the insane poor in Japan. She at last grew so violent she was taken to an hospital, where she became so much worse that they were obliged to tie her hands and feet. This caused her great suffering. She refused to eat, and was in danger of starvation. They took her back to her cage worse than when she left it.

We had been praying for her all along, but now felt that we must unitedly in a definate way commit her case to God, and so several of us did join one evening in such special supplication. I can never forget the apparent hopelessness of her condition as I saw her that day. There was her miserable abode, her mother ignorant of God—with a vacant, wild look in her eye—and her crazed daughter peering through the bars, throwing at us all she could find in her cage. Yet, hopeless as it all seemed, that strange beautiful love of Christ seemed welling up in my heart for that girl, as though He were yearning over her, wanting to bless her, wanting to show us how He loved her. It seems as if she read my thought in some undefined way, for she looked at me a few moments inquiringly, wonderingly. She let me stroke her arm, and speak soothingly to her.

Then, suddenly, the wild look came back again. She seized my hand with a grasp of iron, so that with difficulty I drew it away. Then we sat down and read to the mother from the new testament. My native assistant, Miss R., read how Jesus healed those possessed with evil spirits, and told her that He had the same power now, and would hear us if we prayed for her daughter. We did this in very simple words which she could understand. Before leaving we sang,

"Jesus, Lover of my soul,
Let me to thy bosom fly."

At once the mad girl became quiet. She stood still listening. I felt sure, as we left, that she could be helped with the right treatment, such as is now given to the insane. Her response to the little we could do to soothe and win her proved it. The next day the mother came to the relief station, and said that after we left, her daughter began to be very quiet, and that she had slept nearly all night. The week following she began to improve, and wished to knit. She talked about the "Jesus people," and wished them to come again. I went again to her. Then she sent her love to me, and said that she would come to see me, but "the lady must put her name on her door," so she might know it.

The mother ceased receiving aid, for her son was now able to support her. We heard however favorable accounts from the family from time to time, till one day Miss R. came in with glowing face to tell me, "The crazy girl is well!" I was more surprised than I ought to have been. Those whom I sent at once to visit her returned rejoicing, having seen her clothed and in her right mind. The mother and family said that it was God who had healed her, for she began to recover after that prayer and song. I went myself. By the door sat a young woman in exuberant health, with a brilliant color and expression of face. I thought that she was a stranger. When my helper said, "It is she," I was more surprised, for I did not recognize her. No trace remained of that poor, wan face and suffering eyes. It was hard to believe that she was the once caged lunatic. As soon as she caught sight of me, such a look of love and pleasure came over her countenance! She arose at once, and prostrated herself to the floor again and again. She poured forth her thanks to me, and then her mother and brother came forward and joined with her in thanksgiving. We told them it was to God they owed their thanks, and it was a joy to us to use this experience as an appeal to them to make him their God. We are now praying that this girl may know Jesus as the Saviour of her soul as well as the Healer of her body, and be the means of leading her family and many others to Jesus.

It was this girl's case that made Dr. Thwing, of Brooklyn, see the need of free asylums for the insane in Japan, and led him to give a lecture on the subject at Tokyo, July 1, 1890, which resulted in the setting on foot a movement for that end. While we were all waiting and hoping for such an asylum for one poor child, the merciful Lord undertook her case himself, and set her free. P.

This letter from a lady in Japan, an American missionary, was received by me last week, and has never been in print till today, coming from the press as a leaflet for private circulation, a tender appeal for those in Japan and China who, caged in speechless dementia or maniacal fury, cannot speak for themselves.

She Studied the Effects.

The Taunton News says that a drummer for a New Bedford firm of undertakers, who has enterprise, was in the city Friday. The last place he was in before he reached Taunton was a neighboring village, where the undertaker's wife is head of the family. The lady took a fancy to certain coffin linings, but was uncertain as to what the effect would be when a corpse reposed therein. Rather than lose a sale the drummer offered to act in that capacity, and submitted to being posed in the coffin while the good woman studied the effect. He made his sale.

At a sale of household belongings in Rochester lately there were disposed of one hundred pairs of stockings all hand knit.

For the Patriot.

Letter from New York.

NEW YORK, March, 1891.

Dear PATRIOT: I have a good many things in my thoughts that I might write about, which I am sure your readers would not merely glance at, but stop to read and regard with real interest. It is true we have but twenty-four hours in the day in this large city; just as many and no more than we can count in the smallest town in the shadow of the little hills in the quiet country, but they are all filled to the brim and running over, every minute and second of them, with strange, startling events and incidents, grave and gay, grand and granulous. What a wonderful panorama goes by every wise man in this magnificent metropolis, by day and night, who has, as Soloman says, in a kind of solemn sarcasm, "his eyes in his forehead."

If you or I see or hear anything which interests us deeply we may be sure that our friends and neighbors will listen with pleasure if we tell them about it. So now, on this rule, I am going to speak too briefly of two lectures which I heard recently that were crowded with profit, brightness and beauty, as a Thanksgiving pudding in dear, old New England is, luciously loaded with plums—if you will allow the expression with a dining-room flavor in praise of a feast for the mind and heart.

Dr. E. P. Thwing of Brooklyn, so widely and favorably known from Boston to Bombay, gave a lecture before a large company of students and their friends in this city last week upon the Japanese and Chinese. Dr. Thwing has visited the remarkable countries of these remarkable people and resided among them, and his services have been of the highest value as a teacher, a physician and a Christian missionary. He is so familiar with his subject, as a close student and observer of their religion, laws and customs, that his lecture in the costumes of the natives of various castes and callings were exceedingly instructive and entertaining. His style is terse and emphatic and his lecture recital was interspersed with lively incidents of travel and facts with the high color of romance about them, so that the field he led us over, with his rich Japanese robes flowing around his tall form, was sparkling with floral gems as a field of summer all sparkling with beautiful buds and blossoms.

Dr. Thwing is a poet as well as an orator, whose verses are strong and his measure expressive and pleasing. On the occasion of this lecture, so popular with all, the students sang his fine hymn, "The Star of Hope," with fervent feeling, as a delicate and merited compliment to the accomplished author. Dr. Thwing showed many utensils for domestic use, articles of dress and personal ornaments, and specimens of money of the Japanese and Chinese which gave those who were so fortunate as to be present in the hall a vivid idea of the home life in the flowery kingdom and in the empire of the Mikado.

Though the afternoon was stormy and cold the Oriental matinee was attended by a large and appreciative audience. Rev. Dr. Buneham and Dr. Peters were present and another clergyman whom Dr. Thwing has kindly invited to accompany him to India next year.

The doctor is engaged in building an annex to the Asylum for the Insane in Canton, China, where the destitute lunatics can be treated freely by methods approved by the most enlightened medical science in England and America. There is now no free asylum for the insane in all that vast empire of so many millions. Surely this praiseworthy object of Dr. Thwing is one of the noblest of the sweetness of charity. God bless this generous enterprise. I shall expect that every friend of the doctor in Quincy will furnish one brick at $1 apiece for this building of blessed Christian benevolence. The other lecture of Dr. Thwing was given in the Church of the Sea and Land, which was filled. It was upon the "Romance of American History, from Columbus to President Harrison. It was amply illustrated by stereopticon pictures. It was cheered to the echo.

RALEIGH.

Improve the Looks.

Keep in your bedroom a little pot of cold cream and a big open-mouth jar of corn meal or Indian meal, says the New York Sun. Every night rub a little cold cream on your face. Rub it in well, and then wipe it off the skin without wiping it out of the skin. The heat of our houses and buildings generally bakes the human face, and it needs a corrective. When you wash your hands, soap them well, and then put a teaspoonful of corn meal in the palm of one hand and rub both hands together, backs and fronts. Then wash the soap and meal off, and if you are not proud of the appearance and feeling of your hands, you are beyond the reach of pride. She who follows it will never have chapped or rough hands. Remember this, that whether you rub or wipe your face, do so with an upward motion. The general custom, and natural one of wiping downwards sags the loose skin of the face into wrinkles and ages a woman before her time. Rub up, rub up—it is one of the greatest secrets of life. If your hair is thin, or even if it is not, always brush it well. Spend time at it. Use a stiff brush. Brush your scalp till it feels tender. There is no hair restorative like a stiff, close hair brush vigorously employed. Just so with your body. Never mind about too much bathing but conscientiously give yourself constant and hard rubbing with a body brush or a rough towel every night and every morning. It will make a young woman of an old one.

What is a Servant?

You think you know what a servant is. Well, don't be too sure about it. Not long ago a Rhode Island gentleman died, directing in his will that the sum of $12,000 be equally divided among his servants. And when the division was made the woman who had washed the windows of his house was left out, on the ground that she did not technically come under the designation of a servant. Of course she has brought suit to find out why this is thus, and the lawyers may be expected to make a pretty fight over the point whether the washing of a window is a menial act de jure or only a menial act de facto.—New York Tribune.

This May Mean You.

Are you up with the times, and do you get the best the market affords for the money you pay out? How is it out in the kitchen? Have you the modern improvements there? If you have, then this is not written for you, because you are buying and using Brussels soap. If otherwise, be wise, and when next you order soap, try Brussels and you will gain a point over hard work. It's economical.

School Committee.

The action of the Quincy School Committee at its last meeting in excluding the public through the press, from its meetings and voting to hold secret sessions, is severely criticised. There is no question but what the committee has a right to take that stand. The whole theory of the charter is to have the deliberations of its elective boards open to the public. It is distinctly stated so as to the council, and the School Board should carry out the ideas of open meetings.

The board comes before the council and taxpayers this year, and asks for an appropriation of $65,125, amounting to over forty per cent, of the tax levy, and at the same time refuses the public admittance to the meetings where this money is voted away. It would be just as sensible for the City Council to exclude the members of the press and the public from its meetings, as for the School Committee to take such an unwarranted stand.

If the room now occupied is too small to accommodate many citizens, why not use the Council chamber? The School Board only meets once a month, and by doing so, it would save the city $200 per year.

Executive sessions are rapidly being relegated to the past. In 1884 the Massachusetts Supreme Court handed down an opinion regarding secret sessions, in which it was stated that it was of the highest importance that every citizen should be able to satisfy himself with his own eyes in regard to the acts and proceedings of those who administer justice, and the manner in which a public duty is performed.

The following query was sent to the chairman of several of the School Committees of cities in the state: "Will you kindly inform me if reporters are excluded from the regular sessions of the School Board? The replies were prompt and place the School Committee of this city in the position of being one of the few School Boards in the Commonwealth which still clings to the star chamber way of tranacting public business.

Reporters are admitted in Boston, Worcester, Woburn, Lawrence, Waltham, New Bedford, Malden, Haverhill, Lynn, and probably others which have not replied.

Dramatic Entertainment.

Through the kindness of Mr. John W. Rose of this city, pupils of the New England school of Dramatic Instruction, by permission of Mr. H. M. Pitt, principal, gave a dramatic entertainment Wednesday evening at Faxon hall for the benefit of the Universalist Ladies' Association. The play "War to the Knife" was one to just suit the majority of people, being light, and full of wholesome fun.

Miss Etta B. Rich, a very bright and pretty young lady, was the favorite of the evening, taking the part of Mrs. Delacour, a young widow, in an easy natural manner. We predict success to her future career on the stage. Our townsman, Mr. Rose, as usual, furnished the humorous, and in his part of Mr. Nubby, the green grocer, called forth much applause. Mrs. Harcourt, a young wife, was well taken by Miss Lottie Bradford, a rather pretty blonde of whom we hope to hear more at some future day.

Miss Emily Bleakman and Miss Lillian Brooks, had minor parts as maids but were exceeding good. John Blunt, was well taken by Mr. G. F. Farren, and his conception of the kind hearted, honest cousin John from the country was so good, that the audience almost wished he was their cousin John. Mr. W. Elmer Rae, as Captain Thistleton, was good looking, as all villians are, and took the part in a polished off hand manner.

Mr. Harcourt, a young married man, had a small part in the play, but his conception was good and pleasing to his hearers. Manager Charles A. Bancroft was the detective, who happened in just in time to arrest the villian. He was also stage manager, and a good one to, for the play went off without a hitch. The costumes of the ladies were pretty and some of them elegant, and they wore a different gown in each act.

Following "War to the Knife" a laughable sketch entitled "The Rival School Boys" was given by Mr. Carl Scranton and Mr. John W. Rose. Each boy had a poem to speak, and both wanted to be first, causing some excitement for a time. Piano solos furnished music between the acts.

The Libel Suit.

The following is clipped from the editorial columns of the Milford Journal:

"The Quincy PATRIOT has had a streak of good luck, Dr. W. L. Faxon, superintendent of the National Soldiers Home, having brought suit against its publishers in the sum of $20,000, who say they "know not why the suit is brought, unless it is because we have opened our columns to communications from the old sailors in the Home, who have felt grieved at the way they have been treated." One thing is certain: those who know the publishers of the PATRIOT, and the spirit of courtesy and fairness which invariably marks their conduction of its columns, will never believe that they would knowingly, much less maliciously, do a wrong to anybody, their public and private walks in life pointing in an entirely contrary direction; and if the case ever comes to trial this fact will easily be made apparent to any jury."

Cruelty to Horses.

If the writer to the article signed "T," in the PATRIOT of last week, would call the attention of the local agent in this city—N. B. Furnald—to any cruelty to horses, giving all possible particulars, he will find that the matter will be looked after carefully, and the brutal owners or drivers will be summarily dealt with. It is well enough also to publish such articles, as it awakens a feeling of pity for the ill-abused horse, and we feel it a duty as publishers to present to our numerous readers all communications alluding to cruelty to man or beast, knowing the press to be one of the greatest levers to correct wrong and abuse of this kind.

Fire at Hull.

The house, stable, outbuildings and contents of the estate of the late Alexander Vining, occupied by his daughter, Miss Floretta Vining, at Hull, were totally destroyed by fire Thursday during the absence of Miss Vining. The loss is estimated at over $4,000, and the furnishings were costly. It is thought to have been incendiary. The many Quincy friends who have enjoyed the lady's generous hospitality will regret to learn of Miss Vining's loss, and hope she was well insured.

ARRESTED. On Friday a man hired a horse, carriage and driver of Vinton, of Braintree, to go to Hingham. On reaching East Braintree he ordered the driver to get out, drawing a revolver and threatening to shoot him. Officer Furnald was telephoned that the man had started for Quincy, and headed him off on Quincy avenue. The man took to the woods but Mr. Furnald was too smart for him, capturing him in the woods back of the John L. Eldredge estate. Mr. Furnald secured man, revolver, horse and carriage. The man says he belongs in Hingham but refuses to give his name.

Birthday Surprise Party.

On Monday last, a number of the relatives and friends of Mrs. Lydia L. Trask met at the residence of Mrs. Helen Fitts, her daughter, to congratulate Mrs. Trask on her safe arrival at the seventieth milestone on her journey of life.

The lady was completely taken by surprise, not once thinking that her friends had any designs on her, as her birthday was on Sunday the 8th inst, the day preceding. This worthy lady, who does not sit with folded hands, took from the frames her two hundredth drawn in mat, and the present week has started on another one. While making a visit to her son Monday forenoon, who lives a short distance from her residence, preparation was made to give her a pleasant welcome, and as soon after dinner as convenient she was sent for, to see some callers, and found a table bountifully loaded with good things to tempt the appetite, while relatives and friends extended warm greetings of love and congratulations.

Mrs. Trask was made the recipient of many useful and valuable presents, among which were a handsome pair of gold spectacles from her children and grandchildren, an elegant oak easy chair, upholstered in garnet plush, from sisters, nephews and wives; a silver napkin ring from a dear friend, a china bread and milk set, a very handsome plaque, a rubber water bag from a niece, aprons, towels, handkerchiefs, and an envelope containing a very pleasing gift, besides many other useful presents which were testimonials of love to this dear old lady. These were accompanied with the good wishes of the donors, and her large circle of friends without doubt extend to her the right hand of fellowship and wish her many years of health and usefulness.

The following piece of poetry was written for the occasion by her brother-in-law, who resides in Worcester:

Dear sister, we come to greet you,
At this eventful time,
Hoping that Heaven's choicest blessings
Will rest upon thee and thine.

When you began life's journey,
Many years ago,
You knew nothing of its pleasure
Mingled with its woe.

But in your childish fancies
You built castles in the air;
With pleasure you looked forward,
And everything seemed fair.

When we start in life,
Free from care or sorrow,
We know not what disappointment
Oft awaits us on the morrow.

Ah! how soon you learned
You were in a world of care,
And if you would enjoy its blessings
You must its troubles share.

Although our troubles come,
There need be no repining,
For soon we learn
That every cloud has its silver lining.

In looking over history
We find persons of your name,
One who sold cloth of a purple hue
A living to obtain.

We find but little was said
About her family affairs,
We presume like all good women
She had her daily cares.

One was called the woman's friend,
And dealt extensively in drugs;
We have never heard she had a factory
To manufacture rugs.

It was said she was anxious
About the ladies' health;
We think she was more interested
To obtain their wealth.

Many are not contented,
Although they count their gold by bags,
While others are quite happy
With a heap of woolen rags.

To be avaricious
We are taught is a sin,
Yet some have an inclination
To be always drawing in.

It is true your drawings
Are considered very neat;
Does it show a lack of judgment
When we use them for our feet?

In all our homes we find them,
Those works of art so rare,
But most of all we prize them
For the love that's drawn in there.

In this historic story
We find Lydia of Thyatira, Lydia of Lynn,
And Lydia of Rugsby
All lovingly drawn in.

If for information
Any of you should ask
What the lady who sold drugs
Has to do with Sister Trask.

Or, if you would know
How this friendship begun,
We would kindly refer you
To our Brother John.

Who, with the greatest of pleasure,
We have no doubt,
Would be glad to inform you
How it came about.

If by taking Pinkham's compound,
Better health you find,
We hope for many years to come
You will be ruggedly inclined.

And now our dear sister,
Whom we lovingly regard,
We think of all our family,
You are the drawing card.

Braintree Happy.

There is rejoicing in Braintree that a settlement has been reached, and the amount is smaller than was generally anticipated. The actual cost of the plant is about $135,000, as $25,000 for mill damages is included in the award of $159,610. It is thought now that at a cost of $250,000 Braintree will have two water supplies. The town must now authorize the issue of bonds to cover the purchase.

Miraculous Escape.

Miss Maude Harris and Miss Mary Corcoran, employed at E. W. Gourd & Co. hosiery manufacturer at West Quincy, met with quite a severe accident last Saturday. They were at a doorway on the second floor when by accident they threw the safety bar out of position, which allowed the girls to fall out backward some twenty feet to the ground, striking upon a pile of rocks. Miss Harris was injured about the limbs and Miss Corcoran was bruised about the body. It was a narrow escape from instant death.

A very handsome electric light chandelier has just been put into S. F. Willard's drug store. It is one of the newest designs and was made in New York especially for Mr. Willard.

During the past few weeks there have been an unusual number of private home gatherings at South Quincy, and after a few games of whist a number of the gatherings have wound up with a game of cock fight. Wednesday evening at a party at Mr. C. H. Penniman's, it was decided to try the game. The first contest was between a reporter of the PATRIOT and Mr. Penniman which resulted in an immediate defeat for the scribe. Thinking that perhaps he would be somewhat bashful about saying anything in regard to the game in which he was worsted, I take the liberty to send you this notice. After the scribe's defeat, the others took part much to the amusement of all present.

An interesting entertainment was given Monday evening at St. John's hall, consisting of readings by Miss N. E. Ring and Mr. Edward J. Parker; singing by Misses Julia Doran and Kittie Horan and a lecture on "Public Improvements" by Mr. R. F. Claflin.

The Clan McGregor Literary society met in Doble's hall last Saturday, Mr. Grassick presiding.

An essay on "The hours of labor," was delivered by Mr. A. C. Smith, in which he showed thorough mastery of his subject.

RATS. The greatest collection of live rats that we ever saw was noticed yesterday noon in the store window at Rogers Bros. They had set a large wire trap down cellar and when they went to it they found it nearly full—some twenty or more, all sizes. Several dogs were collected in the Square in the afternoon and the rats liberated. It was great sport for a few minutes.

ATLANTIC.

The Atlantic Social Club will hold its next sociable March 20.

Miss Carrie Stecker has resigned her position as clerk at Stocker's news depot at Atlantic, and will take up journalism.

Mr. Sanford Small, of the firm of Timberlake & Small of Atlantic, accompanied the grocers' excursion which left Boston last Saturday.

Carpenters have commenced work on the house of C. L. Coe on Appleton street.

Miss Kittie Cunningham has accepted a position as clerk in Stocker's news store.

Taylor's Atlantic and Boston express is the name of a new enterprise that started this week.

A barber's shop is to be opened under Music hall, today. Mr. McVey is the artist.

Peter Boiclair has bought a new yacht and his friends are anticipating the pleasure of a sail this summer.

Mr. Thompson, an employe of the Old Colony, has moved into the new house recently purchased by him on Squantum street near Hancock.

Mrs. Eunice Phinney of Melrose spent part of this week with Mrs. E. R. Wade of Atlantic.

Mr. Van Emden of Boston has purchased and moved into the cottage house on Bolph street, next to Music hall.

A choir for the Atlantic Memorial church has been organized, consisting of Mrs. John Carver, Mrs. S. E. Perkins, Miss Annie Hall and Messrs. Thomas, Curtin and Tyler. Mr. H. H. Bemis, organist. If their efforts of last Sunday evening is a sample of what they will do, an added interest will be given to worship in this church.

The boquets seen Sunday on the pulpit of the Memorial church are provided by the King's Daughters and the King's Sons, alternately. After service they are given to the sick. This is only one more of the kind deeds of these excellent organizations under the direction of their superintendent, Miss Mattie Foster.

Joseph Clark, a young man of eleven years of age, met with quite an accident Tuesday afternoon on the bridge near the Atlantic depot. He attempted to get into a wagon which was standing there by climbing over the wheels, unknown to the driver, who started his horses and as a result the boy had his knee dislocated. No blame is attached to the driver and this should be a lesson to other boys who have been in the habit of doing the same thing.

Church Work at Atlantic.

Monday evening a meeting of all interested in the support of worship was held in the chapel of the Atlantic Memorial church. Reports of collector, treasurer, and standing committee were made and accepted. A deficit of $35 was subscribed for by seven of the gentlemen, thus squaring accounts. Plans for the coming year were discussed and the following were elected a soliciting commitee: Messrs. James E. Curtin, Henry W. Reed, Elijah G. Hall, John Carver and Miss Mary Emery. Mr. Theodore Parker was chosen collector.

At the recent annual meeting of the Memorial church Atlantic, the following officers were elected: Moderator, George E. Todd; Deacon for two years, Henry L. Hallett; Clerk, Grace D. Parker; Treasurer, Frank Jenkins; Member of standing committee, George E. Todd; Auditor, Charles H. Hall.

QUINCY POINT.

The Home Missionary society connected with the Washington street Congregational church will hold its quarterly meeting Sunday evening in the vestry at six o'clock. Rev. Edward Norton of Quincy will address the meeting. All members are requested to send their dues to the treasurer, Mrs. Geo. A. Sidelinger.

The Missionary Society will meet to sew Wednesday afternoon at half past two at Mrs. Daniel Higgin's, South street.

Miss J. Donovan of Sandwich, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Edgar F. Hayden of Quincy Point.

At the close of the Sunday school session of the Washington street Congregational church, last Sunday, superintendent Sidelinger presented four members with badges, for attendance every Sunday for the last year: Misses Edith and Eleanor Chute, Mildred Sampson and Master Ernest Hayden.

The entertainment to be given next Thursday evening at the Washington Street Congregational church, Quincy Point, will be well worth attending. The young ladies who will render the various numbers of the excellent programme are graduates of the Boston School of Oratory and the Conservatory of Music. For particulars see the advertisement in another column.

The annual meeting of the Washington Street Congregational church was held Tuesday evening in the vestry. There were present thirty-nine members of the church and the hour from six to seven was socially enjoyed. As will be seen by referring to our advertising colums, the Wollaston Co-operative Bank will hold its yearly meeting for the nomination of officers on Tuesday evening, March 17, at the Knights of Honor hall. At this meeting a limited number of shares in a new series will be issued.

As foreshadowed in these columns the Supreme officers visited Wollaston Lodge, No. 4, Royal Ark, last Saturday evening. Supreme Orator Avery made a short and convincing address, after which Supreme Treasurer Hazelton invited the 39 lucky members to file past a table at which he he was stationed, each receiving as he passed a crisp $100 bill in return for the investment of $47.00 which each member had made in assessments during the year.

One hundred shares of Wollaston Land Co.'s stock was sold Wednesday, at sixty-five cents per share.

A brilliant whist party was held on Wednesday evening, at the residence of Mr. Fred Sanborn, Winthrop avenue, Wollaston. The first prizes were won by Miss Florence G. Roberts and Mr. Walter Badger, and the booby by Miss Lottie Spear and Mr. Jessie Swift.

On Sunday at the Methodist church, Wollaston, Rev. Luther Freeman will preach, both morning and evening, at the usual hours, 10.45 and 7 o'clock. Seats free. The public invited.

If the Old Colony Railroad Company would make a walk, or put in some steps from the end of Brook street to the depot platform, it would confer a great favor on a large number of people, and save many unnecessary steps during the year.

The Epworth League of the M. E. church, Wollaston, will give a fine entertainment, vocal and instrumental, on Wednesday evening next.

An interesting letter was received from Mr. Albert S. Bass of Wollaston, dated at Kingston, Jamaica, March 4. Mr. Bass says that the United States makes a very poor showing at the exhibition, for a nation so rich; and that as yet he has seen but two American flags and they were on schooners.

The Wollaston Baptist church was crowded, Thursday evening, with friends of Mr. W. G. Corthell, who had accepted his invitation to listen to a lecture, illustrated by stereopticon dissolving views, delivered by Maj. Edward J. Jones of Boston, on Mexico.

Maj. Jones' lecture was interesting and dealt with the history, the government, and the people of that little-known and ancient country.

To Amend City Charter.

The Committee on Cities gave a hearing Tuesday at the State House to parties interested in the petition of Mayor Fairbanks of this city to amend the city charter of Quincy, as to require the School Committee to furnish to the mayor each year the appropriations needed for the schools.

There were present from this city Mayor Fairbanks, ex-Mayor Porter, Representative Burke, ex-Representative Federhen, Superintendent Aldrich, Rev. Mr. Roche of the School Committee, Dr. William L. Faxon and one or two more.

Mayor Fairbanks first stated his reasons for amending Section 45, so as to have it apply to the School Board as well as to the other departments of the city; and said he would be pleased to answer any questions that might be asked.

Ex-Mayor Porter spoke quite plainly why it should be amended, and said it was so intended, he thought, by the committee who framed the charter, but by some mistake it was overlooked.

Dr. Faxon also thought it was essential for the School Board to hand an estimate of the amount desired, so that the Mayor should be able to send in to the Council, as required by the charter, an estimate of the receipts and expenditures for the ensuing year.

Supt. Aldrich thought it was unwise to commence tinkering the charter, which was only about two years old. He thought the School Committee better qualified to judge what amount the schools required than the Mayor or Treasurer. And in future years, if Quincy should happen to get in a bad Mayor it would work to the disadvantage of the schools.

Rev. Mr. Roche spoke in a similar strain, and thought best to leave it where it was; believing it to be unwise to make any change.

The hearing lasted about one hour, and was listened to quite attentively by the committee, who will weigh the evidence and make a report accordingly.

Alpha Assembly.

A very pretty party, and probable the most enjoyable of the season, was the third of the Alpha series given in Faxon hall Monday evening. It was attended by forty or more couples of well known society people. The gentlemen were in full dress, while the ladies looked charming in their ball dresses of the latest style. Excellent music was furnished by five pieces of Monk's orchestra.

There were twelve numbers on the order: Quadrille, waltz, Portland fancy, Lanciers, polka glide, quadrille (sleigh bells), schottische, caledonia, galop, Virginia reel, waltz and quadrille. There were encores to some of these, and also five extras.

During a brief intermission the table was set in the middle of the hall, and Caterer Wales loaded it with ice cream, frozen pudding and cake. The gentlemen then looked after the ladies and themselves. It was a delicious treat.

Mrs. J. H. Stetson, who is entitled to all the credit of these parties, was warmly congratulated upon their success, and strongly urged to have one or two more. At the close of the party, on motion of Dr. Gordon, a vote of thanks was passed in no uncertain voice to Mrs. Stetson.

Parish Meeting First Church.

The annual parish meeting of the First church was held Monday, in the chapel. C. H. Porter was elected moderator and Evart W. Adams upon a ballot, was unanimously elected clerk of the parish for the ensuing year. The following officers were re-elected.

Treasurer and Collector,—George H. Field.

Parish Assessors,—Henry M. Faxon, Luther S. Anderson, L. H. H. Johnson.

Managers of Adams Fund,—Charles H. Porter, Edward H. Dewson, Henry A. Johnson.

An amendment to the by-laws creating the committees on Pastoral work, on Young, on Music and Flowers, to consist of twelve, five, three and six members respectfully, also providing for four quarterly meetings of the congregation, was referred to a committee of three consisting of Edward H. Dewson, George L. Gill and Dr. W. L. Faxon to report its expediency at the adjourned meeting.

In response to a communication from the descendants of Rev. John Wheelwright, it was voted to accept the offer of a memorial tablet, the location and design to be subject to approval of the Parish Committee and that the chairman be directed to make acceptance of the proposition for the society.

An adjournment was taken to Monday, March 23, at 7.30 P. M., when the unfinished business will be completed and special action will be taken upon a new warrant embracing articles omitted from the annual document.

Costume Carnival.

The sixth roller skating costume carnival of the Olympian club will take place at the Mechanics building, Boston, on Wednesday evening, March 18.

Thousands of people do not fully realize the meaning of the word carnival. As produced by the Olympian Club, it means 2,000 skaters in costumes of every color and hue, and representing every nation upon the globe. It means costumes specially designed to win prizes for richness, excellence, beauty, originality, ingenuity and effectiveness; also, historical, mythological and dramatic characters. Birds, beasts, fishes, reptiles and monsters of every description may be seen gliding over the polished skating surface. Statesmen and noted men of the past and present, are represented in the grand march. Costumes made of newspapers, wood, leather, metals and every known substance, are on the skating surface. It is a sight which can be produced only at a roller skating carnival. One hundred prizes will be awarded.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, MASS., March 11, 1891.

Representative Bicknell of Weymouth presented the other day a petition from the Weymouth water commissioners that the town may be authorized to increase its water debt. It was against the rule of the House to let in the petition so late in the session, but on Mr. Bicknell's motion the rule was suspended, as has been done so frequently, and the petition let in.

The endowment orders, founded on the plan of the Iron Hall, propose to make a hard struggle to hold their ground in this State in the face of the condemnation of the insurance department. The long term orders, as they call themselves, or such as extend their endowment period over five years or more, have engaged ex-Gov. Robinson, ex-Councillor J. H. Butler and ex-Representative Howland of Chelsea as their counsel and will be heard next week. They ask for certain changes in the law which will enable them to accumulate larger reserve funds.

One of the interesting questions before the Legislature is that of permitting cities and towns to sell to corporations using the streets for permanent structures (such as street railroads, telegraph, telephone and electric light companies) the franchise for such use of the streets. This was a new question last year, being introduced for the first time by Representative Williams of Dedham. An opinion has been rendered by the city solicitor of Boston in favor of the legality of charging for the use of the streets and there is great interest in the matter. Joint sessions have been given by the Committees on Cities and Taxation and there is certain to be debate whichever way they report.

Many petitions have been presented to the Legislature this year for the passage of a law to permit the incorporation of villages with powers to raise money by taxation of themselves for sidewalks, lights and other improvements. Other states have a similar law and the idea is something like that embodied in the law which permits the incorporation of fire districts. But the movement has suffered from the outset from the charge that it was a cover to permit Beverly Farms to accomplish its object; though the Legislature has refused to permit the division of the town. On Friday afternoon the Committee on Towns made a unanimous report against the petitioners.

Travelers by night or in sleeping cars by day will read with personal interest the points of a bill reported from the Railroad Committee. Out of the fourteen members of that committee the only dissenters are Senators Raymond of Middlesex and Kimball of Hampshire. The first section of the bill declares that all persons, companies and corporations owning or operating sleeping cars in this State are common carriers. The second section then goes on to say that when any person has bought a lower berth in a sleeping car, he shall have the right to say to the conductor, porter or other person in charge of the car, whether the upper berth shall be open or closed, until it is sold and occupied. Every violation of the law is punishable by a fine of from $50 to $200. This is for the restraint of the sleeping-car corporations which nag their patrons by letting down upper berths when they are not in use, and so limit the lower holders of berths to exactly what they have paid for, though nothing is gained by letting down the upper berth when no one wishes to occupy it.

The Committee on Banks and Banking has before it the question of permitting National banks to reorganize as State banks. Such hostility to these banks is felt to exist in some parts of the country that adverse legislation by Congress is feared, and so the cautious bank men here are considering whether it is not best to be prepared for a change. Ex-Senator Chas. J. Holmes of Fall River, one of the best known savings bank men of the State, who also has National bank connections, is the leader of the movement. He stated to the committee that the Massachusetts National banks have a capital of $100,000,000, and that $30,000,000 of it is held by the savings banks. The safety of the latter, as well as the former, is thus involved and the committee will give careful consideration to the matter.

Many public spirited people have set about securing the passage of a law by which attractive and historic places in the State may be set apart for public reservations in the nature of parks for the advantage of the whole people. A bill has been submitted to the Senate Judiciary Committee and there is such support that something is likely to come from it.

A favorable report has been made on the appropriation to the Thirty-fifth regiment association to enable it to erect a monument on the Antietam battlefield.

Adverse reports have been made by the committee on liquor law on almost every matter which has been referred to them proposing a change in the details of the license law. Orders have been sent to them as to reducing the licenses and increasing them, changing the fees, repealing the public bar law, the abuttor's objection law and so on, attacking the law at about every vital point. On all of these propositions the committee reports adversely. But several members of the committee dissent and there will be an attempt to repeal the public bar law. One bill has been reported—for preventing liquor licenses of the first three classes from selling liquor to other persons than guests who resort to their premises for food and lodging.

The Railroad Committee has reported against requiring new issues of railroad stock to be sold at public auction. Four of them dissent—Senators Coveney of Middlesex and Representatives Bullock of Fall River, McEnaney of Boston and McDonald of Pittsfield.

A very sharp contest is becoming outlined between the railroad corporations and the people, as represented by counsel for Northampton, Newton and Brockton; over the abolition of grade crossings. Last year's law requires the consent of the railroad directors to a change, but these cities want the matter left with the Railroad Commissioners. RULE.

Dyspepsia

Makes the lives of many people miserable, causing distress after eating, sour stomach, sick headache, heartburn, loss of appetite, a faint, "all gone" feeling, bad taste, coated tongue, and irregularity of the bowels.

Distress After Eating

Dyspepsia does not get well of itself. It requires careful attention, and a remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts gently, yet efficiently. It tones the stomach, regulates the digestion, creates a good appetite, banishes headache, and refreshes the mind.

Sick Headache

"I have been troubled with dyspepsia. I had but little appetite, and what I did eat distressed me, or did me little good. After eating I would have a faint or tired, all-gone feeling, as though I had not eaten anything. My trouble was aggravated by my business, painting. Last spring I took Hood's Sarsaparilla, which did me an immense amount of good. It gave me an appetite, and my food relished and satisfied the craving I had previously experienced." GEORGE A. PAGE, Watertown, Mass.

Activity at Atlantic.

WOLLASTON, March 10, 1891.

DEAR PATRIOT: I write you a few words which I trust you will have the courtesy to insert. Perhaps its merits and truths may be recognized by a few of your readers. I speak of our little sister Atlantic. There is displayed a spirit of activity in this little borough of Quincy which should be imitated by her much elder sisters. I speak of its social doings which partakes of dancing, concerts and other light entertainments that serve to please and educate all for a fine taste and I might say in no mean way advertise the activity of this little place. Prominent in the circle is the little wide awake Social club, the active members we might mention Messrs. Jas. F. Gay, Jas. E. Curtin, John Carver and Louis B. Tebau. The condition of the club is prospering and on the high road to success.

Their bal masque on Friday evening last showed a remarkable ingenuity of its members as well as the richness and appropriateness in costuming. I recognized Mr. John Carver in Continental dress; Mr. L. B. Tebau as Chas. v; Mr. M. H. Owen as Louis XIV; Mr. C. L. McClintock as Humpty Dumpty; Mr. James E. Curtin as Samoset the Brave. Among the ladies, Mrs. P. A. Coombs, Japanese court lady; Mrs. John P. Carver, little red riding hood; Mrs. Jas. E. Curtin, as star light; Miss Sarah Ayer in a rich domino. One of the best character costumes was that by Mr. A. J. Aberlee, as the Atlantic letter carrier (to be), and other good characters which space forbids to mention. I congratulate the club on its social success, also Atlantic for its life and vim.

Yours very truly,
MISS WOLLASTON.

For the Patriot.

Letter from Brooklyn, N. Y.

The handsome face of the PATRIOT is welcomed with every Saturday. It is but one of sixty-five papers and magazines sent to me from this land, Asia and Europe, but it is carefully examined. Since Quincy became a city its materials of municipal interest increase. Some of your old citizens are living about here. I dined last Monday with Rev. Mr. Heath, who was a former pastor in Quincy. He hopes to accompany me, if all is well, next year to India and China by way of Egypt and the Holy Land. His facile pen will again tell of far off people and places to the delight of your readers.

Yesterday, the fourth anniversary of the death of the great preacher, was observed by Plymouth church. Dr. Abbott gave a glowing tribute and fifty little girls in white with as many boys, each dropping a rose before a large picture of Mr. Beecher, marched into the lecture room with song. Lawyer Shearman, the superintendent of the Sunday school, said that Dr. Hammond, now of Washington, the eminent alienist, once told Mr. Beecher that he was the greatest man in the country. "You forget yourself," was the instant retort. This Delphic utterance, a reproof if you emphasize the verb and a compliment if you put stress on the pronoun, illustrates the wit which flashed from his commonest colloquies.

Dr. Pentecost writes to the Eagle a graphic account of the brilliant life he has in Calcutta. He moves in high life and low. One night he dined with the viceroy but left when the ball began, removing his dress coat and pumps in his carriage and putting on a coarse garb which he had provided and drove to the slums and worked with the Salvation army with "men and women steeped in sin," feeling much more satisfaction, he says, than with the gay party.

Mr. and Mrs. Stebbins are on their way home.

Florida and the West Indies allure many of our people during the bleak days of February and March. A year ago I was in Ceylon's spicy isle with the mercury 85 daily. We have had our streets free from snow all winter here, except a few days.

Brooklyn now is rapidly increasing in population and will soon count her million people. The extension of the elevated roads, the building of a tunnel for trains and new bridges over East river will give acceleration to its expansion of territory and numerical size. The project of a tunnel to Jersey is maturing. This will make it the great entry port for the Atlantic coast. Already it has more shipping than its neighbor across the river, which some of our aspiring citizens venture to call West Brooklyn, anticipating the time when the name New York will only be known as the name of the state, and Brooklyn shall be all and in all.

March 9, 1891. E. P. THWING.

A Glimpse of Italy.

The third of the course of stereopticon lectures at the Christ's church parish house, was given Wednesday evening, and attended by about 150. Rev. Frederick B. Allen, the lecturer, visited Italy while on a foreign tour and retains a vivid recollection of the country. The views which he presented were clearly shown by the stereopticon.

Few countries have the varied scenery so compact as Italy. The lecturer entered the country at the north among the snow clad peaks of the Alps, and took his party to the beautiful lakes. Then he went south to the renowned cities of Milan, Florence, Rome and Venice, giving views of the beautiful cathedrals, public buildings, statuary, scenery, etc. One could not but have a better idea of Italy and a longing to take the trip in reality. A few comic scenes for the boys concluded the evening's entertainment.

MILTON.

A supper complimentary to ex-Representative Walter P. Beck will be given at the Parker House, Boston, next Monday evening by the Milton Democratic Club.

The entertainment given at the church last Friday evening, by the King's Daughters, for the benefit of Mrs. J. L. Esau, netted something over $100.

East Milton Division Sons of Temperance held a donkey party on Tuesday evening at Washington hall, and will hold a "mum" party next Tuesday evening at the same place.

Mrs. Rhines who has been sick has re sumed her position as bookkeeper at Kemp & Tisdale's.

The regular church sociable was held at the house of Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Eaton, off Washington street, Wednesday evening.

—The recent firemen's ball at Hingham, netted $171.58, which increases the relief fund to $591.

Seventeen Wives.

If you are married by the service
Of the Episcopalian rule.
Do you know how many wives you'll have
On rising from the stool?
Just sixteen more than you supposed,
In fact, odd seventeen:
Commencing with "this woman" is the first,
And now I ween,
"Four better" and "four worse" are eight,
And eight and one make nine;
"Four richer" and "four poorer"
Finish this addition line.

Household Receipts.

LEMON CREAM. Beat one and one-half pints of cream to a stiff froth, sweeten to taste with fine sugar, squeeze in the juice of four lemons, add one tablespoonful of gelatine soaked in cold water, and dissolve in a little hot water. Pour into an oiled mold. It is best to make it the day before it is required.

SAUCE FOR COLD MEAT. An excellent sauce to eat with cold meat, ham, beef or mutton, can be made by taking half a pint (or more if needed), of soup stock, and heating it with a little vinegar, then add salt, butter and very little sugar, and thicken with equal parts of fine bread crumbs and grated horse-radish. Eat cold.

BOILED RICE. Wash well in two separate waters a pound of the best Carolina rice; then have two quarts of water boiling in a stewpan, into which throw the rice; boil it twenty minutes; when done strain in a sieve, then let cold water run on it; strain and put back in stewpan for a few minutes, when it is ready to serve.

POTATO CAKES. Two pounds of mashed potatoes, four ounces of butter and a little salt, two pounds of flour, and milk enough to make a batter; one-half cup of yeast; set to rise, and when light bake in cakes the size of muffins.

SPONGE CAKE. Six eggs and three cups of sugar, beaten together five minutes, one cup of cold water, four cups of flour, two teaspoonsful of baking powder, lemon or almond flavoring; bake in a dripping pan.

POTATO PUFF. Two cups of mashed potato (that has been put through a sieve); season with salt and pepper; stir in two tablespoonsful of butter, beat to a cream, add two well-beaten eggs and one cup of cream. Pour into a baking dish, and bake in a hot oven.

MADE FOR USE. John McCarthy of Rockland—Salem street John—wears a pair of spectacles that were made in Rockland some 35 years ago by the late Paul Baker, who enjoyed quite a reputation as a blacksmith. Mr. Baker's brother Samuel met with an accident at Reed's mill, by which he lost one of his eyes, and Paul made the glasses for his accommodation. The bows are many times heavier than those now in use, and promise to wear for generations to come.

DEDHAM. The old clock that was presented to the First Church of Dedham, by by Samuel Dexter in 1763, at the time of the rebuilding of the present meeting house and which was discarded when the present clock was given to the society by Hon. Edward Dowse, more than half a century ago, has been brought to light, repaired and restored, and can now be seen at the Dedham Historical building, keeping time with renewed accuracy.

A POINT NOT WELL TAKEN. Going down the Chesapeake bay on an excursion, when the wind was fresh and the white caps tumultuous, Judge Hall, of North Carolina became terribly seasick. "My dear Hall," said Chief Justice Waite, who was one of the party, and was as comfortable as an old sea dog, "can I do anything for you? Just suggest what you wish." "I wish," groaned the seasick jurist, "that your honor would overrule this motion."

WHITMAN. The plan laid out for town meeting in Whitman this year was upon a scale calculated to cause some apprehension to owners of property and tax-payers of Whitman. Among the extra inducements offered for the expenditure of money is a town hall, $50,000; a new school-house, $12,000; a new artesian well, $15,000; stone roads, $5,000; new roads, about $5,000, and all this aside of the regular town expenses.

☞ Whalebone is a horny substance found in the mouth of the whale. The number of strips of whalebone obtained from the mouth of the whale amounts to about 390, and are from 12 to 15 feet in length, 10 to 12 inches broad, and from 3-10 to 5-10 of an inch thick. They consist of parallel fibres, and are easily bent or split. From its elasticity, strength and lightness, whalebone is employed for many purposes.

Lasts twice as long as cheap soap for laundry use.

Anecdotes.

Visitor to Old Lady: "Your son writes for the newspapers, I understand."

Old Lady—with pardonable pride: "Yes, my son is mighty smart, if I do say it myself, that shouldn't."

Visitor: "Does he use a pseudonym in his writing?"

Old Lady: "Oh, no, he can't write with the pesky machines. He has to to it by hand."

"Marie," said the lieutenant, "let us get married at once."

"But, Henry, dear, we have only been engaged a week."

"I know it, love; but I am a soldier, and soldiers like short and decisive engagements."—Harper's Bazar.

Estelle—"Time presses me."

Madge—"Now I know what you mean when you say, Fred acts like time."

Mrs. One: "Did you ever see one of those ossified men like they have in museums?"

Mrs. Other—thinking of something else: "No, but I see a mulefied man every time I look at my husband."

"Hab yo' got any medicine dat will purify the blood?"

"Yes, we keep this sarsaparilla at one dollar a bottle. It purifies the blood and clears the complexion."

"Well, boss, hasn't you got sumfin' fo' fifty cents, jess fo' de blood? I don't keer about de complexion."

"Nein, mein friends," screamed the Anarchist, "ve are not after de airth, as somepedies has said. Ve are after noddings but our rights! Ve vant dem! Ve vill take only vat ve need, and——"

"Then why don't you take a bath?" cried a voice in the rear of the hall.

We suggest to our esteemed contemporaries and they throw less journalistic mud and use more Brussels soap.—Ex.

Temperance.

Teachings of Science.

Now, not only the most characteristic but by far the most marked action of alcohol is upon the nervous system—upon the brain, the spinal cord and the nerves. The brain has more attraction for alcohol than the other organs of the body. In case of death from direct alcoholic poisoning in men, as some times happens by accident, or in animals as produced by experiments, more of the poison is found in the brain and liver than in any other parts and there is a larger proportion in the brain than the liver. But alcohol has not only a special aptitude to be in the brain, but to act upon its soft and delicate structures, and to change its important functions.

There is a class of agents, including alcohol, opium, belladonna, ether and, chloroform which are called narcotics. Their effects are peculiar, all agreeing with each other in many respects, but differing in some minor particulars. Their action is specially upon the nervous system and upon those portions of it concerned in mental operations. They are generally described as first exciting and then depressing nervous action, and as particularly operating upon the intellectual part of the brain.

The excitement which these narcotics produce is usually very brief, and is, often at least, indirect, and may be produced by the resistance of the system to the intrusion of an unnatural agent.

The cause of a fever, through depressing poison, produces an excitement of the circulation, and often of the operations of the mind, but neither this or the narcotics increase muscular strength or any regulated or any useful form of activity; and the excitement produced by the narcotics is soon followed by the depression which is their most decided and characteristic effect. Many of their apparently exciting effects can be accounted for on the supposition that their entire action is depression or paralyzant. Some nerves excite action in the organs which they supply, and others restrain action; and the performance of proper functions depends upon the balance of these exciting and restraining nervous influences. Those that restrain and thus regulate action are called inhibitory nerves, and when those supplying an organ are weakened, paralyzed or destroyed, certain actions of that organ are increased, but these actions become irregular, and real permanent force is not produced.

Some apparently stimulating effects are known to be caused by paralysis of the inhibitory nerves, and not by a stimulating effect upon the excitor nerves; and this is likely to be the case in more instances than have yet been demonstrated. But whatever and however apparently increased action is produced by narcotics, it is irregular and transient, and is accompanied by unfavorable activity, certainly when the narcotics are taken by persons in health, and such action is followed by the characteristic depression.

Boston Amusements.

Boston Theatre.

Following "Yon Son" at the Boston comes the favorite Primrose & West's Minstrels, to the scene of their former triumphs. Their coming is always the occasion of considerable excitement among theatre goers and already the sale of tickets is quite large. Lew Dockstader will be on hand next week and many other prime favorites. Thursday afternoon, March 19, an extra matinee will be given for the benefit of the Actors' Fund, a most worthy object.

Boston Museum.

"Sunlight and Shadow" is a great success and draws large houses; so popular has it become that it will undoubtedly have a long run. Mr. Abbe as the gardener is particularly good and the whole play is an admirable production. "Sunlight and Shadows" is preceded by "A Cup of Tea," a most charming short play. Usual matinees Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Tremont.

Next Monday evening "Dr. Bill," the three-act comedy by Hamilton Aide, will be reproduced at the Tremont theatre. The situations are purely farcical and enormously funny, the author contriving very skillfully those anticipatory events or hints upon which, rather than upon the actual occurance, the fun of a farce often runs. "Dr. Bill" will be preceded by a new work, a dramatic episode, in one act, by the famous young English dramatist and author, Jerome K. Jerome, entitled "Barbara." The engagement will mark the first appearance here this season of Isabelle Evesson, formerly leading lady of the Museum, and a great favorite.

Hollis Street Theatre.

"Blue Jeans" draws immense audiences to the Hollis and it is conceded by all to be the most taking sensational comedy of the day. The play had a five months' run at the 14th Street Theatre, New York, and always to full houses. Wednesday and Saturday matinees are given as usual and the usual Hollis Street theatre prices will prevail throughout the engagement.

VALUABLE LACE. New York buys more lace than any other city in the world, and there are said to be scores of New York ladies whose collections of lace vary in value from $20,000 to $50,000. The Vanderbilts possess laces which rival the Prussian and Austrian crown laces and are valued at $500,000. The late Mrs. Astor had a lace dress that cost $15,000, and another was recently sold to an American lady for $25,000.

☞ The following incident is said to have occurred in a pious family not a hundred miles from Stoughton. On Thanksgiving morning the head of the family, while thanking the Lord for the good He had done for the little ones of his family, grew eloquent over the benefits they had received. He thanked Him for the old horse Barney which gave them such delightful country riding. He thanked Him for their home and good dinners, and he poured out his soul in thanks to God for the toys that they had. His little four-year-old daughter could not contain herself. She broke into the prayer with a sigh, and then clapping ecstatically, said: "Oh, God, don't you wish you were us?"

☞ Here's another reason why ordinary people should oppose trusts: John F. Parsons, the New York lawyer, who organized the sugar trust, received what is thought to have been the largest fee ever paid to a lawyer in this country—$400,000. Although this enormous sum came primarily out of the pockets of the sugar refiners, it will eventually have to be paid by the sugar consumers, and every reader of this paragraph will have to pay a portion of it.—Worcester West Chronicle.

☞ The Dorchester Beacon says:—"It is reported that Miss Bundy, a teacher in the North school, Milton, who has recently recovered from a long sickness, was lately presented with money and presents amounting to about $400, by friends on Milton Hill and elsewhere."

FOR NEWSPAPER WORK. We have received from The Journalist, 117 Nassau street, New York, a valuable little manual entitled "The Blue Pencil and how to avoid it." It is a series of simple rules for making and editing newspaper "copy." It is written by Alex. G. Nevins, and not only seeks to point out what everyone knows are blunders, but which many writers, carelessly perhaps, are habitually making. Price ten cents.

☞ The longest board fence in New Jersey, and possibly in the country, is just being completed at Tranquility. It encloses J. O. Stuyvesant's new deer park and will be 12 miles long. The tract is 2000 acres. The fence is 10 feet high and is made of hemlock boards an inch and a half thick. The sawmill at Allamuchy has been running constantly for a year cutting lumber for this one fence. It will cost $20,000.

☞ Chicago proposes that its new edition of Eiffel's tower shall rival the "cloud-capped" peaks of the Alps. It is to be 1150 feet high, with an additional 300 feet of steel flagstaff, and it is intended that 100,000 people at once can find the delectations of the upper air on it.

☞ The losses of the Massachusetts savings banks from bad investments and frauds or defalcations for the seventy-two years of their existence has been less than 14 cents on each $100 deposited.

☞ It cost Massachusetts $8,953.39 to supply the ballots for the election in November last. One million ballots were distributed. It is doubtful if Republicans think it paid.

☞ Leander J. McCormick put up a ten story hotel on Rush and Ohio streets in Chicago. To spite him, Mrs. Mark Skinner, a widow, has had a 45-foot wall built on her adjoining property so as to shut off the north light from "that McCormick monster." The case has gone to court.

—Weymouth folks are suffering to a great extent from la grippe. Doctors say that there is more sickness prevailing than has been the case for years before. Many la grippe victims of last winter are suffering from a return of their malady.

—Cohasset's railroad station is to be lighted, both within and without, by electricity early in the spring.

He Got Warmed.

A couple of Attleboro urchins amused themselves peculiarly recently. The elder of the twain persuaded his three-year-old companion to visit his father's barn with him. There he divested him of every stitch of clothes he had on and proceeded to give him a new coat—of the blackest gudgeon grease. Though it was quite cold, the two then started for the house, where the father of the "blackamoor" happened to be standing. As they approached him he wondered who that naked little darkey could be. His wonder changed to a more intense feeling when the "darkey" addressed him with the greeting, "Hello, papa!" The child was taken into the house and it was the work of hours to clean him. There was not an inch of his person that was not daubed with the nasty grease.

Chief Engineer Sewell, who is connected with a transatlantic fleet of steamers, has completed, it is reported, 132 round trips between New York and Liverpool, making the vast distance of 941,000 standard miles.

A solid train of seventy-five cars of lumber arrived in Savannah, Ga., one day last week.

A store building at Decatur, Mich., is nicknamed "Mummery block" because all the village secret societies meet there.

Poetry.

The Old Folks' Longing.

Don't go to the theatre, lecture or ball,
But stay in your room tonight;
Deny yourself to the friends that call,
And a good long letter write—
Write to the sad old folks at home,
Who sit when the day is done,
With folded hands and downcast eyes,
And think of the absent one.

Don't selfishly scribble, "Excuse my haste,
I've scarcely the time to write,"
Lest their brooding thoughts go wandering back
To many a bygone night,
When they lost their needed sleep and rest,
And every breath was a prayer
That God would leave their little babe
To their tender love and care.

Don't let them feel that you've no more need,
Of their love and counsel wise,
For the heart grows strangely sensitive
When age has dimmed the eyes.
It might be well to let them believe
You never forget them quite—
That you deem it a pleasure when far away
Long letters home to write.

Don't think that the young and giddy friends,
Who make your pastime gay,
Have half the anxious thoughts for you
That the old folks have today,
The duty of writing do not put off;
Let sleep or pleasure wait,
Lest the letter for which they waited and longed
Be a day or an hour too late.

For the sad old folks at home,
With locks fast turning white,
Are longing to hear of the absent one,
So write them a letter tonight.

HIS DUTY.

A TRUE STORY.

Bennie Waters got up at daylight that morning to build the fire and warm the room for his mother, who was not strong, and found the keen air of the early spring very trying in their rudely built cabin, a few miles out on the plains, from the village. All the time he was about this labor of love, he was thinking of the fortunate opening likely to be his that day.

He had been searching for something to do in the village, for matters were getting serious in their little home. The mother had been sick so long, their expenses had been so heavy, that the little they had saved against a time of need was now completely gone. Next to nothing remained for them to live upon; and, if possible, he must find work of some kind to keep actual want from the door.

So for two or three days previous to this morning he had been looking for work, but without success. He was either too young or not strong enough, or they had no work for a boy; and he had become well-nigh discouraged. The evening before, however, just as he was about to give up trying farther for that day, he had stepped into the store of Field & Swinburne, hardware dealers, and asked if they needed a boy. He was shown into the office, where he found Mr. Swinburne alone.

That gentleman, after making some inquiries as to Bennie's age, and where he lived, said:

"Yes, we do need a boy; but Mr. Field is now out of town. You may come tomorrow morning, however, at nine o'clock, and we will see what can be done for you. Mind, now, and be on time, as we shall hire the first boy that comes along."

"What wages would you be apt to pay?" Bennie ventured to ask.

"Oh! two or three dollars a week," answered Mr. Swinburne, carelessly. "It depends altogether on how well you work."

So Bennie built the fire, and busied himself in cooking the potatoes—all that they had for breakfast—happy at the prospect before him, and sure that he would do his best to earn the highest wages suggested. On that amount he felt confident his mother and himself could, with proper care, live comfortably until she was able to work again.

The breakfast—if a dish of potatoes can be called a breakfast—once ready, he went to the door of his mother's room and called her.

"Only think, mother," he exclaimed, as they sat down at the table, "I'm to have work today; and, if I'm worth it, I'm to have three dollars a week, and that'll be enough for us to live on."

"Yes, indeed!" responded his mother. "But I fear you are too young to undertake so much; above all, to take your long walk after each day's work."

"Oh, I can stand it easily enough mother," he asserted confidently.

When the poor little meal was finished, he brought in several huge armfuls of wood, and arranged, as far possible, for his mother's comfort throughout the day, and then put on his coat and started.

"Here is your scarf, Bennie," said his mother, calling him back. "It will be chilly as you walk home tonight, and you will need it.

He laughingly took it, not realizing then how it would be of special service to him a little later.

It was not yet eight o'clock, and he had ample time to reach the village before the appointed hour. The most direct way was down the railroad track; and he hurriedly tripped over the ties, as happy as boy could well be.

Within a mile of the village, the track made a sharp turn to the right, and entered what was known as Henway's cut, where the road-bed had been blasted through solid rock for a number of rods. As Bennie reached the curve, he, as a precaution glanced back along the track to be sure the 8.45 passenger train was nowhere in sight, and then entered the cutaway.

When about half way through, however, he suddenly stopped; for in front of him lay a large bowlder, which had fallen from the cliff above, and completely blocked the passage.

But it was possible to clamber over it, and Bennie began to do so. Then he as quickly got down again. The thought had come to him that the train, Number 27, coming around the curve at full speed, would not have time to come to a full stop before reaching the obstruction; and a smash-up, more or less terrible in its results was inevitable unless some one gave the warning.

But, if he waited to warn the train of its danger, he could not reach the village at the appointed hour, and might lose the place. Indeed, Mr. Swinburne had distinctly said, if he was not there on time, they should hire some other boy.

There was not time enough to go on to the village and have some one sent to flag the train. At least, it would be a tremendous risk to do so.

The first house back up the track was a full mile away, and to go there and leave word to stop the train would also make him late at the store.

For a moment he hesitated. More than this: he actually left the cutaway, and went a short distance up over the cliff toward the highway. Then he came back to the track, and with quivering lip sat down. He knew it was his duty, whatever the personal sacrifice, to stay there and warn the train.

"I can't leave here," he resolutely said, "even if I do not get work, and we have to beg."

The train was late that morning, and for nearly an hour he sat there. He knew it must be already nine o'clock, and he wondered if some other boy had been hired to fill the place he had only an hour before been so sure of. In spite of himself, the great tears would come to his eyes.

The low rumbling of the train at last roused him from the despair into which he was fast falling. Springing to his feet, he exclaimed.—

"I wish I had a red flag, an' I'd stop the train easy enough."

Then his eye fell on his scarf. It was large, and of a bright red color. The next moment he had cut a long stick and stretched his scarf to its widest capacity over one end, forming a wide flag. He now hurried down the track toward the coming train, moving the scarf to and fro as he had often seen the flagmen do.

On came the train; now it was near enough for the engineer to plainly see him. The next instant a prolonged whistle which Bennie knew meant "down brakes" rang on the air, and he jumped from the track.

The cars shot by him, but came to a standstill near the curve. The engineer sprang from his cab, asking:

"Well, my boy. What is it?"

"Just step around the curve, and you'll see for yourself," answered Bennie.

The engineer, fireman, conductor, and a crowd of passengers hurried into the cutaway, and a moment later stood by the bowlder.

"It is a big morning's work you have done, my lad," the conductor at length said. "Had we come around that curve and stove full force into that rock, there would have been terrible work here. How came you to discover it?"

So Bennie briefly told his story.

"I was going to work for Field & Swinburne down at Scottsville this morning at nine o'clock, and left our cabin back here a couple of miles to go there. When I got here I saw the rock and I knew I ought to stay to give you warning. Though I s'pose I have lost my place by it," he added regretfully.

"How is that?" asked a tall, finely dressed gentleman, standing by.

"Why, Mr. Swinburne said I was to be there on time," answered Bennie, or else they should hire some other boy."

The conductor now decided that, with enough men and proper tools, the obstruction could be removed in an hour or two at the farthest, and dispatched a messenger to the village for them. He also advised the passengers to return to the cars, and make themselves as comfortable as possible during the delay.

Then a gentleman spoke up enthusiastically:—

"Let us make up a purse for the lad. Here are five dollars toward it."

A hat was passed among the passengers, and a few minutes later the gentleman announced:—

"We have got a hundred dollars. Now where is the boy?"

He could not be found; but a brakeman finally said:—

"I saw him go off toward the village with the man the conductor sent down there."

"He'll be back this way by and by, likely as not," said the conductor, "If not, it can be left at the Scottsville depot for him."

It was true Bennie had hastened off to the village, hoping he might even yet reach the store before some one else was engaged. But in this he was disappointed. For, as he entered Mr. Swinburne's office, that gentleman looked up at him, and curtly said:—

"You are too late, sir: I engaged another lad half an hour ago. Learn next time to be punctual at the appointed hour."

Poor Bennie! Without offering a word of explanation left the store and hurried off home. He had no heart to look elsewhere for work that day at least. He knew he had done right, that his mother would approve of his course. Still, he could not get over the great disappointment that had come to him. What in the world should they now do for bread?

As he reached the cutaway, he found the men busy blasting the bowlder to pieces, and paused to watch them. While he stood there, the conductor caught sight of him.

"Look here, youngster," he said, "aren't you the boy that stopped the train?"

"Yes sir," promptly responded Bennie.

"Well," he went on, there is a gentleman up at the cars that wishes to see you."

Wondering what could be wanted of him, Bennie went up to the train, clambered into the parlor car, and asked,—

"Is there a man here who wants to see me?"

"Yes, sir," exclaimed a gentleman, dropping his paper and springing to his feet.

"We all want to see you. We want to thank you for your unselfish conduct this morning, and give you this roll of bills, as a token of our appreciation of your act." And he handed Bennie the money.

"I didn't expect nothing," said Bennie, modestly and ungrammatically. "I didn't just like to see the train busted up."

"We can well afford to give this money to you," replied the gentleman, kindly; "for some of us would have doubtless lost our lives but for you, and had the overturned cars taken fire in that cut, none of us could have escaped."

With joyful heart, Bennie now hastened home. Nor was his joy any less when his mother, after listening to his story said,—

"I would rather a son of mine should do his duty, even if it forced us to beg, than to have secured the best position by a dishonorable act."

But the good flowing forth from Bennie's unselfish act did not end here. The very next morning, as he was cutting wood at the door a gentleman rode up and asked,—

"Are you Bennie Waters?"

"Yes, sir," replied the astonished boy.

"Well, here's a letter I was asked to leave here," said the man handing it to him.

It bore the heading of "Field & Swinburne," and read:—

SCOTSVILLE, KY.

MR. BENNIE WATERS:—Dear Sir,—Mr. Field, of our firm, was upon the train you so bravely warned of its danger yesterday, regardless of your loss. We have decided that we have a place in our store for a boy like you; and we will furnish your mother a tenement in the village, rent free, and allow you at first five dollars a week. I trust you will be magnanimous enough to overlook my unpardonable curtness of yesterday; for, had you explained the cause of your delay, we should have hired you then and there. At your earliest convenience let us know your decision.

Respectfully yours,
GEORGE A. SWINBURNE.
Firm of Field & Swinburne.

Bennie and his mother have already moved into their comfortable home at the village, and he is busily at work in the store. He studies hard evenings, and hopes to thoroughly master the business he has entered. He says:

"I just did that morning what I knew was my duty, and all came out right in the end. So it will always.—Sunshine.

How the Months were Named.

In looking up the peculiar names given each of the twelve months of the year, it becomes necessary for us to go back to the old Romans who have imposed upon us a set of names equally as absurd as those which the Norsemen, Scandinavians and Saxons applied to the week, says an exchange.

January is named from Janus, the god of doors and gates, because the month opens the year; some say that he is a two-faced god and could look back on the last year and forward to the coming.

February is from Februo, to purify.

March was originally the first month and was named for Mars, the god of war.

April is from aperire, to open, because the buds open in that month.

May is Main, a goddess.

June is from Juno, the patron of marriage, and is, therefore, the favorite month for weddings.

July was named for Julius Cæsar, and August for Augustus Cæsar. Originally August had but thirty days and February twenty-nine in the common year and thirty in leap year.

Augustus was jealous that Julius' month should have more days than his own, therefore took one from February and added it to August.

September, October, November and December are so called because they were originally the seventh, eighth, ninth and tenth month of the year. The names are now inappropriate and rank misnomers as now applied.

Under the Sign.

He was a real pretty young man and he was gotten up in the highest style of art. He sat in the cable car, next to the stove, and regarded with evident admiration a pair of very positive, very loud checked, and very new trousers, which he pulled up carefully at the knees to prevent any tendency to bagging.

The car rattled and clattered along and all the passengers gazed into upward vacancy, like all other cable-car passengers do. Finally a fair maiden, who sat opposite the young man, saw something and giggled, after the fashion of her kind. Then she looked at the nice young man and giggled again, then she nudged her fair companion, and the fair companion gazed across the car, looked at the young man and giggled. A small boy followed their looks, stared at something over the young man's head and then snorted.

All this annoyed the nice young man, who had been looking very wise, and when two or three other passengers joined in the chorus he began to wriggle and quit looking wise. The laughing increased, and grew, and spread, and the nice young man grew desperate. He got up to see what it was over his head that caused the unseemly cachination. He found it. It was one of those big cardboard signs that adorn cable-cars. It was printed in big black letters and it said:

"The young men sitting beneath this card is one of our customers. He is very fussy and hard to please, but, my! isn't he an elegant dresser? He has on a pair of our $3 pants."

The nice young man left the car—left it in haste, in anger—leaving behind him some very naughty words that smelt of sulphur.—Kansas City Globe.

A Man with a Pet Whale.

On a small island in the middle of the South Pacific lives a planter, the only white man on the island—which is full of brown skinned folk—who cuts and dries the meat of cocoanut, which he sells to trading vessels. When any stranger stops at his island he gives him of the best that his island affords. He will get up great concerts and dances of the islanders, above all he will take them out to see his pet, which is perhaps the largest and oldest animal that was ever petted by any man. The pet is a sperm whale nearly seventy feet long. He came through the narrow entrance into the little harbor, which is walled in by a coral reef, when quite small, and remained until he had grown so large that he could not get out if he wanted to. The great creature comes up to be fed when the planter blows his horn, and after his meal of a barrel of chopped meat or fish, performs some wondrous and amusing tricks, apparently knowing what is expected of him.—Sheffield Telegraph.

For the Twin's Sake.

"I am sick and tired of this chromo business, and from now out I shall separate my art collection from my bar soap trade." Thus spoke a weary housekeeper who has been taking inferior soap at a high price because with it went a two-cent chromo. And then for the twin sakes of economy and ease, she laid in a stock of that best of all, Brussels soap.

A Letter from Russia.

The following is one of a series of interesting letters, written for the Braintree Observer by a citizen of Braintree, who has been travelling in Europe, sight seeing, and, knowing that the readers of the PATRIOT would read and enjoy it, we take pleasure in transferring it to our columns:

ST. PETERSBURG, 1890.

MR. EDITOR: No one can visit Russia without becoming convinced that Peter the Great was a wonderful man. By his own energy, sagacity and resolute determination he brought the empire out of barbarism into the highway of civilization. This marvellous city with its great acquisitions, is of his own creation. He founded, built, established and made it what it is today, one of the finest, as it is the most modern of the cities of Europe. He favored commerce, cultivated the arts, encouraged learning, stimulated industry, fostered manufacturers, dug canals, and in a great many ways developed the wealth and resources of the Empire. Although he was an absolute monarch with an imperious will, yet he was a man of and for the people, for whose welfare he lived and worked with extraordinary zeal and energy. He was every inch a King, yet at the same time he was a common laborer, being a good carpenter, a good locksmith, a good shipwright and a good machinist, who, by his own industry taught the people how to work. He gathered about him skilled artisans, and everywhere encouraged the introduction of civilizing influences into Russia. Although he may have had his faults, yet he must have possessed true nobility of soul, and was a very great and a very noble man for by his own efforts he secured the elevation of his race. The first palace built by Peter the Great, still stands upon the summer garden, which is in the centre of the city, laid out with paths bordered by trees, and shrubs, and flowers, and contains some statuary which was stolen from the Poles when Constantine conquered Warsaw. The palace is small and unpretentious, and contains a table in the dining-room which was made by himself.

Not far from the palace in the wooden hut which Peter the Great built, and occupied while he was planing the city. It is now covered by another structure for the purpose of protecting and preserving it. The hut is built of logs, same as those built by the Finns, having three rooms, one of which contains the famous picture of Christ under glass, which is magnificently decorated with precious stones of great value. This picture was very highly prized by Peter the Great, and was used by him as a talisman, and borne in front of the army inciting it to victory, and at other times carried by him in his travels. The room containing this picture is now used for religious service. Such is the faith of the people in this shrine, that the room is crowded with worshippers every day in the week, the people come and go, pray and sing, bowing, crossing themselves, and kissing the glass covering the picture, believing that they are blessed thereby. After it has been kissed a number of times, the man in attendance takes a cloth and wipes it, to keep it clean for the next lot of pilgrims. It is said people travel hundreds of miles to see and adore this picture, believing it has a wonderful power in curing all the ills of life and saving one from peril. In another room are many curiosities and relics of his time, and in one case is preserved a silver shovel which has been used by every Emperor and Empress since his time in setting out trees about this cabin. Here also is a small boat which was built and used by Peter the Great.

We visited the royal mews, an immense building, where we saw a great array of state carriages, sleighs, sledges, harnesses, saddles, horse covers etc., many of which are profusely decorated with gold, silver and precious stones. Some of the carriages are beautifully carved and handsomely painted by the best artists, and decorated with jewels of great value. We saw funeral plumes, dressses and harnesses with silver mountings for 300 horses. Catherine II had many carriages. Then there are those of Paul, Alexander and Nicholas. Each carriage has its story of coronation, funeral, etc., in which the czars come and go. One of the carriages has decorations of diamonds inside, and crystal topaz, ruby, and bezel outside. There is one sleigh which was made and used by Peter the Great. One carriage was the gift of Frederick the Great. Saw the carriage in which Alexander II was riding when a bomb struck and shattered it. Some of the outriders were killed, but the czar was uninjured, and when he got out of the carriage to assist the wounded, another bomb was thrown which took off his legs and killed him on the spot.

Upon the spot where Alexander was killed, a chapel has been erected where the faithful pray and contribute their mites. The city abound with museums, the principal of which are the Academy of Sciences, which is rich in all kinds of curiosities relating to the East. The Academy of Fine Arts, contains a large collection of modern paintings.

The hermitage, which adjoins the Winter Palace, was founded by Catherine II. It is an immense structure containing forty-one rooms filled with splendid specimens of paintings by all the great masters, also, statuary, antiquities, Siberian marble, jewels, cameos, medals, ivory carvings, Malachite vases and tables, violet jasper, lapis lazuli, in vases and tables and other works of art making a collection equal to any in the world and of inestimable value.

There are more than 2000 paintings, which represent the different schools of art. It is especially rich in the Dutch and Flemish schools; among them, are fine examples of Rembrandt, Gerard Dow, Rubens, Potter, Teniers, Ruysdael, etc. It is also strong in the Italian, French and Spanish schools. It has also a fair representation of the English and Russian schools, but I did not see a solitary picture from America. That was the only real deficiency.

In one of the rooms of this building there was an exhibition of various objects which once belonged to Peter the Great, in which we were deeply interested. There I saw the very tools which he used when in Holland, when he went to learn the art of constructing vessels. There we saw his lathes and all sorts of machinery which was used by him in his various occupations. We saw models of vessels, his work-bench, his desk, [illegible]rel, etc., etc. We saw also a magnificent display of diamonds, crowns, watches, card cases, boxes, swords, and canes, the most of which, were profusely decorated with precious stones.

In another room we saw the antiquities of Kertsch, which consisted of all sorts of jewelry, coin, vases, hemlets, etc., to be found in tombs recently discovered and excavated down by the Caspian sea, being the remains of ancient Greek art, prior to the Christian era. We also saw a great display of armor of all kinds and from all nations.

The Winter Palace which adjoins the Hermitage is one of the largest in the world, being 450 feet long by 350 feet deep, when occupied by the Czar is said to be inhabited by a gay throng of people; and its magnificent saloons decorated with marble, malachite, gold and paintings, are filled with an immense quantity of rare and beautiful objects, not equalled by any other palace in the world.

A Cold-blooded Groom.

"Have you brought any witnesses?" asked the Rev. Mr. Wood of Bathgate, of a middle-aged couple who had come to be married.

"No; we ne'r thocht o' that. Is't necessary?"

"Oh, certainly," said the minister; "you should have a groomsman and bridesmaid as witnesses."

"Wha can we get, Jean, dae ye think?"

The bride, so addressed, suggested a female cousin, whom the bridegroom had never seen, and, after consultation, a man was also thought of.

"Step ye awa' alang, Jean, an' ask them, an' I'll walk aboot till you come back."

Jean set out as desired and after some time returned with the two friends, the cousin being a blooming lass, somewhat younger than the bride. When the parties had been properly arranged and the minister was about to proceed with the ceremony the bridegroom suddenly said: "Wad ye bide a wee, sir?"

"What is it now?" asked the minister.

"Weel, I was just goan to say that if it wad be the same to you, I wad rather hae that ane," pointing to the bridesmaid.

"A most extraordinary statement to make at this stage! I'm afraid it's too late to talk of such a thing now."

"Is it?" said the bridegroom in a tone of calm resignation to the inevitable." "Weel, then, ye maun just gang on."—Newcastle (Eng.) Chronicle.

Hot Summers in the Past.

It will perhaps assuage the discomforts of the coming summer to read some past experiences with heat, compiled by a German statistician. In the year 627 the springs were dried up and men fainted with the heat. In 879 it was impossible to work in the open fields. In the year 993 the nuts on the trees were "roasted," as if in a baker's oven! In 1000 the rivers of France dried up, and the stench from the dead fish and other matter brought a pestilence into the land. The heat in the year 1014 dried up the rivers and the brooks in Alsace-Lorraine. The Rhine was dried up in the year 1132. In the year 1152 the heat was so great that eggs could be cooked in the sand. In 1227 it is recorded that many men and animals came by their death through the intense heat. In the year 1303 the waters of the Rhine and the Danube were partially dried up, and people passed over on foot. The crops were burnt up in the year 1394, and in 1538 the Seine and the Loire were as dry land. In 1556 a great drought swept through Europe. In 1614 in France, and even in Switzerland, the brooks and the ditches were dried up. Not less hot were the years 1646, 1679 and 1701. In the year 1715 from the month of March till October not a drop of rain fell; the temperature rose to thirty-eight degrees Reaumur, and in favored places the fruit trees blossomed a second time. Extraordinary hot were the years 1724, 1746 1756 and 1811. The summer of 1815 was so hot that the places of amusement had to be closed.

An Object Lesson.

A doctor prescribing for a baby was sadly vexed by the officiousness of the child's feminine relative, who tried all sorts of home remedies for it, saying in apology:

"We thought if they did no good they would do no harm, doctor."

At the end of his patience the doctor one morning called for a bowl, a spoon and some fresh butter, and began stirring the latter round and round with an air of grave importance. The ladies gathered about him inquisitively, but he gave them no attention, until, at last, curiosity becoming rampant, they cried in chorus:

"Oh, doctor, do tell us what you are going to do with the butter?"

Here was his chance. Facing them solemnly, he said, "I am going to grease the baby's elbow with it. It may not do any good, but it won't do any harm."

Alaskan Mosquitoes.

Moss, shrubs, and berries grow in great profusion along Yakutat Bay shore, and over the moraine a regular trail was formed as the large brown bears crossed and recrossed in search of food or berries. The glacial stream divided into a thousand branches and formed an ideal delta, depositing silt and glacial debris. Our course took us over a mountain spur and across an interior basin about one thousand five hundred feet in height, filled with numerous lakes and swarming with mosquitoes. Indeed, there were such myriads of the latter that imagination suggested that each flake of snow had concealed within it a germ, and thus the mosquito had generated. Here it is that sometimes huge brown bears, driven to fury and desperation by these tormenting little beasts, finally tear their flesh and die in agony.—From Scribner.

The Saltest Water.

The saltest piece of water upon earth is according to Consul-General Steward, the lake of Urumia in Persia, situated more than 4000 feet above the sea level. It is much salter than the Dead sea, the water being found, on analysis, to contain nearly 22 per cent. of salt. The lake is 84 miles long and 24 miles broad, and its northern coasts are incrusted with a border of salt glittering white in the sun. It is said that no living thing can survive in it, except a very small species of jelly fish. It is very shallow.

No Venomous Beetles.

Of more than 40,000 species of beetles widely diffused over the earth's surface not one is known to be venomous, or possessed of a sting. Butterflies and moths have no mouths to eat with, only a proboscis to extract sweet juices from flowers. Neither do they grow after assuming the winged state. When in the caterpillar state they are voracious eaters. A company of some species will strip a whole tree within a single day.—St. Louis Republic.

The Sewerage System.

Monday the train arriving at 10.21 A.M. brought to Quincy the Legislative Committee on Drainage, to whom was referred the petition of the city of Quincy for authority to construct and maintain a sewer.

The committee was in charge of Messenger Pedrick and is composed as follows: —Senators Donovan, Clark and Drury, Representatives Perkins, Moore, Lawrence, Hutchinson, Hinds, Sparhawk, Lanigan and Knox.

The committee was received at the depot by Mayor Fairbanks, Commissioner Ewell, Representative Burke, Councilman Bass, Moxon, Drake and Roberts, ex-Councilman Whitman, a PATRIOT representative and others.

Hacks were in waiting and the party started for Great Hill, visiting the City Farm on the way and inspecting the proposed site for the pumping station. No objection could be offered to that as it is in an isolated spot.

Returning from Houghs Neck a ride was taken through the populous section between Quincy and West Quincy.

Landlord Davis of the Robertson House, served an excellent game dinner to the party before the committee returned.

Yachting News.

Vice Commodore Sanborn has addressed a letter to each yacht owner of the second, special and third classes, asking them to agree to sail the first three races of the season without trimming their boats by dead weight. The cups offered by him will be awarded as a result of these three races, but the conditions must be that the rules of the Quincy Yacht Club shall govern, except that ballast shall not be shifted.

If in either class the yacht owners cannot agree to such conditions, the offer of the cups in that class is withdrawn.

The rules of the club for the first class are satisfactory to Mr. Sanborn and a cup will be given in that class, as a result of the first three races, and subject to the existing regulations of the club.

At an adjourned meeting of the Quincy Yacht Club held in the Ward room, City Hall, last Saturday evening, Chapter III, section 8, was so amended as to allow shifting ballast in all but the first class. The club also voted not to join the New England Yacht Racing Association.

Division 5, A. O. H.

Division 5, A. O. H., celebrated the anniversary of St. Patrick, Tuesday evening, at the Coliseum, by a lecture by George Makepeace Towle, and a concert by the Apollo Male Quartette of Boston.

The programme was divided into four parts. Part first being three selections by the quartette following which came the lecture which brought the struggles of Ireland down to the year 1800, then came more selections by the quartette and the conclusion of the lecture from 1800 down to the present time.

President J. J. Byron in introducing the speaker said the object of this meeting was twofold: First, the celebrating of the anniversary of St. Patrick, the patron saint of Ireland, also the patron saint of the Ancient Order of Hibernians; secondly to replenish the treasury of the division, from which $700 had been paid in sick benefits during the past year, and to aid in the future in carrying on the work of true Christian charity, which is the fundamental principle of the organization, and he was pleased to introduce Mr. Towle as an orator who, although not of their race or creed, would in an unbiased manner explain to the audience the subject, "Ireland's Struggles."

Basket Party.

Francis L. Souther Camp 27, Sons of Veterans, celebrated its first anniversary Wednesday evening, by a basket party at Faxon hall. The festivities of the occasion commenced shortly after 8 o'clock with a social dance, the grand march being led by Floor Manager and Mrs. Frank W. Munroe who was ably assisted in the management of the floor by comrades Allie White, George Prouty, E. G. Sanborn, Frank Stoddard, James Barnes, George Chubbuck, George Phillips and C. A. Bliss.

The ladies were out in good numbers, each of whom as they entered the door was seen to deposit with the committee a mysterious looking basket, which was so covered that it was impossible to see what surprises the sweethearts of the Sons had prepared to tempt their appetites.

About 10 o'clock during an intermission Capt. Bowker took a position on the front of the stage and proceeded to auction off the baskets which sold for from 35 cents to $2.85. This was where the fun of the evening came in, for the young ladies who had prepared the contents of the baskets had done so with care in hopes perhaps that their's would fall to some young bachelor, for it is well known that the best way to reach the heart of a man is through his stomach. After the auction the purchasers opened their baskets and finding the name of the lady who contributed the same, sought her out and then the two proceeded to enjoy the contents. This over dancing was again resumed and was continued until midnight.

Braintree.

The climax of this brilliant season was reached last Friday night, March 13th, in the masquerade ball given by Mrs. N. Eugene Hollis in honor of her daughter, Miss Lucia E. Hollis, at Town Hall, Braintree. The hall was elaborately decorated in pink and white, and Richardson's orchestra of Boston, hidden behind a screen of ferns, poured forth most bewitching music. The matrons were Mrs. Hollis, Mrs. Prof. Pitkin and Mrs. J. Frank Faxon.

At 8 o'clock the grand march was formed, led by Miss Hollis in white satin court costume and Mr. Frank Wilde as courtier. The floor was under the direction of Mr. Wilde, Mr. Wilbur Farrington as centennial, Mr. Hollis White as black prince, Mr. George Farrington, prince, Mr. Harry Hollis, cadet, Mr. George Wales, Faust. During the evening punch and lemon frappe was served to the merry maskers. At 10 o'clock, to a long note from the cornet, the masks were removed and much merriment followed. Soon after all descended to the supper room, where a banquet was served by a noted caterer of Boston. Among those present whose costumes were worthy of mention were:

Mr. Stanwood Hollis, prince; Mr. Hayward, courtier; Mr. Thorndyke, centennial; Mr. Ellsworth, Mexican; Miss Morrison, gipsy girl; Miss Shaw, court lady; Miss Holbrook, folly; Miss Pratt, night; Miss Rogers, brigand's daughter; Miss Dyer, Red Riding Hood; Miss Farrington, Mikadoo; Miss Hall, tambourine girl; Miss Dickey, Grecian; Miss Faxon, domino; Misses Eaton, dominos; Misses Dewson, dominos; Mr. Price, military; Mr. Harlow, monk; Mr. Schenkleberger, Mr. Porter and the Messrs. Holden, dominos.

Last year there were expended for general repairs of highways, $17,345.52. The item in the appropriation bill this year is $14,420.50, or $2,925.02 less. It looks as if the department would not be able to accomplish much, but the Commissioner should not be blamed.

The Swedish Temperance Society held a dance at Faxon hall, Thursday evening. Those who think the modern hop waltz requires considerable energy should have seen these people. Some men went so far as to take off their coats.

The adjourned meeting of the City Council to be held next Monday evening promises to be a lively one. Efforts will be made to change items in the appropriation bill, and both sides are preparing arguments pro and con. Then there are other important matters.

The rumor that the testimonial to Mr. Galen V. Bowditch, the winner of the first prize in the DAILY LEDGER popularity contest, was to be a burlesque is a mistaken one. On the contrary it is the intention to make it one of the best entertainments of the season. Professional talent has been secured from some of the Boston theatres.

Mr. Tanner was a member of the class of '91, Quincy High School, which attended the services in a body. He was a young man of exemplary character, who was very popular with all the young people of South Quincy.

Tuesday some of the girls employed in one of the shoe shops wore green ribbon in honor of St. Patrick. Later in the day several other girls appeared decorated with orange ribbon, causing a wordy war which continued to grow hotter and hotter until they finally came to blows and then for a few moments how the hair did fly. The girls were separated however before either side had been hurt much.

A horse and buggy minus a driver came down Hancock street flying Tuesday, and turning the corner into Chestnut street struck F. F. Crane's team which stood in front of the store, overturning the buggy and clearing the horse who was captured near Foster street. The buggy which was badly damaged was taken to Tirrell & Sons shop. The owner of the carriage is not known but is said to hail from Braintree.

Golden Grail Entertainment.

The concert and entertainment held Thursday night by our local commandery of the Golden Grail proved to be as they promised, the best yet. Robertson hall was literally packed, but were held in their uncomfortable position until the last song was given by the magic of the entertainers.

The meeting was conducted by Mr. James O. Donovan. Mr. Maynard, the blind artist, did his part nobly and Mr. R. O. Jones, the Briton, met every demand and was wildly applauded. R. C. Allen in his usual way kept the crowd roaring; Donovan brothers showed that our Quincy boys have muscle by their club swinging. Mr. W. P. Edwards, the imperial commander, spoke for half an hour on the objects of the order and was successful in keeping the audience in good humor throughout. Judging by the enthusiasm this order has the lead.

DEFECTIVE FLUE. In our account of the destruction by fire of Miss Vining's Hull residence last week, we stated that the house and out-buildings were destroyed but are pleased to learn since, that this was incorrect, as fortunately the fire was confined to the house only, the wind being in the right direction to keep the flames from the other buildings. The fire was caused by a defective chimney. The house was occupied at the time by Mr. James Griffith, who has charge of Miss Vining's property, two hired men and a housekeeper. Miss Vining had returned to Boston the day previous from a trip to Washington and was greatly shocked to receive a telegram while at breakfast, informing her of her loss. Besides the furniture, bed and bedding, Miss Vining lost a large amount of valuable clothing. Miss Vining was insured.

An interesting and instructive stereopticon lecture was delivered Wednesday evening in Christ's Church parish house by Rev. H. E. Cotton, the rector. Rev. Mr. Cotton was applauded at the close.

Dr. Adams is the son of old Dr. Adams of South Royalston, and comes to us after extensive practice in a Connecticut hospital and with his father in South Royalston. The third Wednesday evening of each month has been set apart as "Ladies' Night" and it is needless to say they are to become very popular. A party from New Haven has hired the Ramsdell house on Billings street, occupied by Mr. Robinson, and will move here about April 1st.

The spacious parlors of Mrs. James E. Curtin, Atlantic street, were well filled on Saturday evening last with a merry crowd of neighbors who gathered to celebrate her husband's fiftieth birthday. They literally "rang the bell" on "Jim," but though taken by surprise he stood it like a veteran and with his usual originality welcomed the friends who greeted him upon his entrance to his home. After the first general greetings the tables were set for drive whist and the game went merrily on till time was called at eleven o'clock. Mrs. H. W. Read secured the first ladies' prize. and James F. Gay the gentlemen's first. divided impartially between Mrs. Elijah G. Hall and Councilman Wilde.

After the awarding of prizes a dainty collation was served and still the party lingered till the clock warned them that the week had gone, and with many expressions of regard and good feeling for "Jim" and all that dwell within his gates, and with a keen appreciation of the hospitality of his good wife, the adieus were said and a pleasant party had become only a pleasant memory.

Waldron, City Missionary. A committee consisting of Mrs. Hodgkins, Mrs. Bennett and Mrs. Todd, were given charge of the work of cutting out and preparing clothing for the needy. It is desired also to aid the Fresh Air Fund by which the poor shop girl, or tired mother and her children are sent to Rosemary Cottage, Eliot, Maine, for a two weeks' summer vacation. ☞ A newspaper and a newspaper editor that people don't talk about and sometimes abuse, are rather poor concerns, The men and business that an editor sometimes feels it a duty to defend, at a risk of making enemies of another class, are often the very first to show their ingratitude. The editor who expects to receive much charity or gratitude will soon find out his mistake; but he should go on and say and do what he conscientiously thinks right, without regard to frowns and smiles.—Exchange.

Houghs Neck Postmaster.

The following correspondence is self-explanatory:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.
WASHINGTON, D. C., March 11, 1891.

SIR: I have the honor to inform you of the reappointment of William Boyd as postmaster at Houghs Neck in the county of Norfolk, and State of Massachusetts, in accordance with your recommendation.

The necessary papers will be sent to the appointee without delay.

Very respectfully,
S. A. WHITFIELD,
First Asst. Postmaster-General.
Hon. E. A. Morse, Canton, Mass.

CANTON, Mass., March 13, 1891.
Capt. Wm. Boyd, Houghs Neck, Mass:—

DEAR SIR: The inclosed communication from the First Assistant Postmaster-General is self-explanatory, and is in answer to a large petition in your behalf which was forwarded by me to the Post Office Department. Very respectfully,
ELIJAH A. MORSE.

Capt. Boyd has already received several congratulatory letters, and to one and all of his friends he desires to return thanks.

Attempted Suicide.

Monday morning John B. Smith, walked into the Police station and wanted Deputy Langley to issue warrants against twenty persons whom he said were throwing lymph and trying to kill him, he also said they had brought a coffin with them and left it in his room. Deputy Langley seeing that something was the matter with the man locked him up and summoned physicians who pronounced him crazy.

The man was searched and what articles that could be found were taken away, and he was again locked up until the necessary papers could be made out.

Between 12 and 1 o'clock Monday night Officer Kelley went into the station as is his usual custom and discovered the man lying on the floor in a pool of blood.

He immediately notified Deputy Langley who found the man had in some way become possessed of a razor with which he had attempted to take his own life by cutting his wind pipe.

Drs. Hallowell and Hunting were called who sewed up the wound and ordered his removal to the hospital where he is slowly recovering.

Smith is about 28 years of age and is unmarried, he formerly worked in this city, but has been in New York for some time and only came to Quincy last week, and was boarding with his uncle Robert Smith on Granite street, who says he is not a drinking man. During the strike of the quarrymen last year, he was one of the prime movers and when the strike was ended he lost his situation, which worried him so much that he has been out of his head at times ever since.

Parish Meeting.

The annual meeting of the Congregational society was held Monday evening, and the following officers were elected:

Moderator,—Elbridge Clapp.
Clerk,—James S. Baxter.
Standing Committee,—W. G. Comey, C. W. Carter, T. H. Wason.
Treasurer,—W. G. Comey.

The subject of adopting the "free pew system" was the principal theme discussed. But, though all seemed to favor the movement, it was not considered advisable to take any action at present. It may be adopted in the near future. It was voted to raise $4000 for current expenses.

Governors' Babies.

It has been claimed that Governor Russell was the first Governor of Massachusetts to have a child born to him while holding that office. But Dr. Wm. Everett says it appears that Gov. Dudley, one of the Colonial Governors had a son born while he was in office and he himself was born while his father was Governor.

Quincy of Quincy.

A gentleman of strong Democratic proclivities, and who never jokes, announced today at City Hall, that he was good authority for stating that Hon. Josiah Quincy of Quincy would become a voter of Boston this year and be in the field of candidates for the mayoralty.—Herald.

CITY COUNCIL.

Considerable new business was introduced at the regular meeting of the City Council Monday evening. Twenty members were present at the roll call, the only absentees being Councilmen Duffield and Fallon.

Proposed Water Supply.

Mayor Fairbanks forwarded the report of the State Board of Health on the proposed water supply for the city. It was received and placed on file

COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Reply of the State Board of Health to an application from Quincy for advice in relation to Water Supply under the provisions of chapter 375 of the acts of 1888.

OFFICE OF STATE BOARD OF HEALTH,
13 Beacon street,
BOSTON, March 11, 1891.

To His Honor the Mayor of Quincy:

In reply to an application for the advice of this Board under the provisions of Chapter 375 of the Acts of 1888, I am instructed to submit the following as the advice of this Board:

It is impracticable with the information which has been presented to give a final judgment as to the quantity of water which Quincy can obtain from the ground bordering the Blue Hill river in Braintree in the vicinity of the outlet of Great Pond; but it seems improbable that a supply for 30,000 people can be obtained at this place, unless a considerable proportion of the water filters into the ground during the summer from Great pond which has already been taken by the towns of Randolph, Holbrook and Braintree for water supply purposes. The quality of the water taken from the ground as proposed has not been tested, but there is little doubt that the natural supply from the ground here would be excellent.

The proposed storage reservoir is so large in proportion to its water shed that the water in it would be replaced on an average, only once in 19 months, and it is improbable that it would furnish water of a satisfactory quality for the direct supply of the city if it was not carefully prepared at a considerable expense by removing all vegetable matter from its bottom and sides.

The feasibility of replenishing the ground water supply with the stored water will depend much upon the character of the ground, which has not yet been determined.

If it should be granted that the city of Quincy should introduce an independent supply of water, this Board is of opinion, in view of the above considerations, that further investigations should be made before a final decision is reached, relative to the construction of works for supplying water from the source, such investigations however cannot be made in season for presentation to the legislature this year. We know of no other territory within a reasonable distance from Quincy, from which it is at all probable that a supply independent of the present one can be obtained, and it is also true that this territory is a more appropriate source of supply for Quincy than for any other community.

The rights of Randolph, Holbrook and Braintree to the water of Great Pond should not be infringed upon; but the city of Quincy would be more likely to obtain a sufficient supply if it could obtain from these towns the right to use to some extent the storage capacity of this pond.

The water furnished from the storage reservoir of the Quincy Water Company, which is now the main source of supply for the city, is derived from a territory having a very small population; but its quality is not satisfactory on account of the large amount of organic matter which it often contains and the bad taste and odor which it has at times; moreover, it is liable to pollution from the piggeries and barns upon the watershed. It is entirely practicable to remove many of the objectionable characteristics of this water, and to greatly improve its quality. The quantity to be derived from this source is sufficient for the present wants of the city.

By order of the Board,
SAMUEL W. ABBOTT,
Secretary.

Councilman Jones moved that when the Legislative hearing should be held that the Committee on Sewers and Drains be instructed to appear.

Councilman Bryant believed the committee should be instructed either to favor or oppose the movement. He thought it would be suicidal to appear before the Legislature without the knowledge which the State Board of Health desires.

Councilman Jones said the Mayor, City Solicitor and Committee on Sewers had held conferences, and they favored a conditional bill, which should grant the city authority, the plans to be subject to the approval of the State Board of Health.

The Mayor was summoned at the request of Councilman Bryant, and said the Legislature could grant the act even without the approval of the State Board of Health.

Councilman Jones' motion prevailed.

Appointments.

The Mayor forwarded the following appointments which were confirmed; Michael F. O'Brien to be Registrar of Voters for three years; Francis A. Spear to be Sealer of Weights.

Claim for Damages.

The Mayor forwarded a communication of John A. Duggan claiming damages to property on Hancock street in Ward Six, because of a change of grade in said street. Referred to Committee on Claims.

Common Street.

The Mayor forwarded the communication of Commissioner Ewell as to necessary repairs on Common street. That official thinks $1200 needed for a drain on the Adams street end, and believes there is need of a paved gutter on the easterly side of street at other end. Referred to Committee on Streets.

Cemetery Enlargement.

The Mayor recommended that the Managers of Public Burial places be given an opportunity to present needs of an enlargement of the Mount Wollaston Cemetery. Referred to Committee on Public Grounds.

Wants a Hearing.

The Mayor informed the Council that Isaac Shute et al were now desirous of a hearing on their claim for damages. Referred to Committee on Claims.

State Aid.

Petitions of Mary E. Lonney, Bridget Donnelly and Phebe A. White for State Aid were referred to the Committee on State Aid.

Washington Street.

Councilman Drake presented the petition of John R. Graham and others that Washington street be rebuilt from Foster street to the Quincy Point bridge. Referred to the Committee on streets.

A New Street.

Councilman Hammond presented the petition of T. F. Mannex that a way between Hall place and Rogers street be laid out as a city way. Referred to Committee on Streets.

Arthur Street.

Councilman Powers presented the petition of Robert Farquhar and others for the acceptance of Arthur street. Referred to Committee on streets.

The Ranks Full.

The Committee on Elections reported the result of the special election held in Ward One March 5, and President Thompson declared H. Walter Gray duly elected.

Mr. Gray was present, and after being duly notified came forward and was sworn in.

George W. Hall's Petition.

The Committee on Streets on the petition for a street from Grove street to land of George W. Hall reported leave to withdraw. Accepted.

Sidewalks.

The Committee on Finance endorsed the recommendations of Mayor Fairbanks in his budget, concerning sidewalks, and recommended that the Committee on Streets report an order concerning the same. Accepted.

No Action Necessary.

Councilman Jones reported that Malnati Bros. had made other arrangements and did not wish to run guy rope across Liberty street. Petition dismissed.

City Hall Alterations.

The Committee on Finance reported an amendment to the order calling for plans for remodelling City Hall, providing the expense should not exceed $250. The amendment was adopted and the order ordained.

Monthly Statements.

The Committee on Finance reported the statements of the Treasurer and Auditor for Mar. 2 as correct. Placed on file.

Rent for Chemical House.

The Committee on Claims reported that the bill of the estate of Relief Whicher ought to be paid, and appropriated $37.51. Adopted.

State Aid.

The Committee on State Aid reported in favor of paying James A. Dowd and William Mulligan $4 each per month from October to April.

50 Cents Per Day.

The Committee on Claims recommended the payment of $56 to Michael McGovern for rent of derrick used on Common street. Adopted.

Hydrants.

The Committee on Fire Department reported favorable on petitions for hydrant on Beale street and one at corner of Standish and Old Colony avenues. Laid on table.

Leave to withdraw was given on the petitions for hydrants at the junction of Newbury and Hollis avenues in Ward Six, and on Liberty street in Ward Three. Councilman Warner objected to the latter recommendation. Chairman Bass of the committee said hydrants should be located as asked, but the Water Company refused to extend its mains. Report accepted.

Annual Appropriations.

The Committee on Finance reported in print an order for the annual appropriations which appear on the fourth page of today's issue. It was read once and ordered to a second reading.

Chairman Claflin desired to be heard, but the President ruled that all business must emanate in the Council. An opportunity might be offered at a later meeting.

Quincy's Centennial.

President Thompson appointed the following committee of the Council on the observance of the 100th anniversary of the incorporation of Quincy: President Thompson, ex-officio, Councilmen Holden, Newcomb, Jones, Hammond, Sherman and Wilde.

Assignment.

President Thompson assigned, Councilman Gray, the new member, to the Committee on Health, Poor and Bonds.

Illegal Expenditures.

Councilman Bryant offered the following:

ORDERED,—That whereas the School Committee by the making of a contract with a certain person named Cashman, and by the purchase or agreement to purchase of the Old Colony railroad certain tickets for the transportation of children, have in the opinion of the City Council exceeded the authority in them vested by the provisions of section 43 of city charter, and that by the making of said contract have incurred an illegal liability, and done an illegal act, that the Mayor is hereby requested to have such measures taken by the city solicitor (if in the city solicitor's judgment the debt or liability incurred as above mentioned is illegal) to prevent the payment of such sum or sums as have been illegally contracted for or incurred by the action of the School Board under the provisions of the charter.

Councilman Bryant championed his order. He said the charter limited all departments to one-third of last year's appropriation until the new one was made, and the School Committee by new contracts for transportation had already overrun this. They were limited to $267, but had spent about $450.

Chairman Claflin admitted that the charge was technically accurate but practically inaccurate. The extra expense was incurred to transport children west of Cross street to the John Hancock school. The city charter was arbitrary, but he did not think it the purpose to keep strictly within the one-third. It was unfair to single out the School Committee and criticise them.

Councilman Bryant argued that the School Committee should have come to the Council in January, if it desired to incur new expense. The purpose of the order was not particularly against the School Committee, but to impress upon various departments the necessity of keeping within their appropriations.

Councilman Jones coincided with Councilman Bryant.

Councilman Warner believed other departments should be included in the order, as by a report of the Auditor there were deficiencies in several departments.

Councilman Bryant said the deficiencies in the Auditor's report were for 1890, while the matter to which he directed attention was of this year's contraction.

Councilman Holden thought it not so much a matter of dollars and cents as the establishing of a bad precedent.

Council Moxon thought it an unnecessary fight, as the School Committee had acknowledged its error.

Councilman Pratt moved to lay the order on the table. Did not believe in censuring the School Committee which was working without pay for what they believed to be best interests of the city.

Councilman Jones seconded the motion, as he did not want ill-feeling caused.

Thought, however that the Committee had not acted for the best interests of the city, as transportation was unnecessary.

Order laid on table.

Shall We Have More Light.

Councilman Jones offered a motion that the Council of 1891 grant no more petitions for street lights. Not that he was opposed to more light, but because no more could be furnished without making a loan therefor.

Councilman Moxon and Bryant objected to binding themselves, and upon motion of Councilman Wilde the motion was laid on the table.

The Water System.

Councilman Bryant enquired of the Chairman of the Committee on Sewers if he understood how to proceed according to the wishes of the Council before the Legislature relative to the proposed new water supply.

Councilman Newcomb did not enlighten him much.

At 9.25 the Council adjourned for one week.

The following Quincy business was transacted at the Dedham session of the Norfolk County Probate Court Wednesday:

Margaret Elcock of Quincy was appointed guardian of Margaret Dinegan and Arthur Dinegan of Quincy.

Grace Roberts was granted an allowance in the estate of William Roberts, late of Quincy.

Watches that have been spoiled by botches restored and warranted. Williams, West Quincy.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, March 18, 1891.

The Quincy representative of the same name continues to hold his own as the leader of the Democratic side of the House and does not seem to have injured his prestige on account of his support of biennials against a majority of his party. He is credited with considerable work for his side and has quite a Democratic contingent with him, but the Republicans failed to stand in line solidly, as well as the Democrats. The other representatives of the Quincy and Weymouth district are quiet and make no demand upon the time of the House.

The elevated road situation in Boston has taken on a new phase in consequence of the reports to the House Thursday. In the first place all of the petitioners for leave to build elevated roads agreed to the report "leave to withdraw" upon their cases. Then the Committee on Street Railways reported a bill on the petition of the Old South Society for a rapid transit commission, providing for such a commission and conferring upon it great powers of investigation. The bill provides that the commission shall report to the Legislature not later than the first Wednesday of February, 1892, and absolutely suspends last year's charter for the West End Company till the Legislature shall have voted upon the report of that commission. It remains to be seen now whether the West End will favor or oppose this action, but it would not be strange to have it transpire that the whole move was engineered by the West End Company.

Bills have been reported that certificates of the State Normal schools may be accepted by school committees in place of having examinations and that the State Board of Education may examine applicants for teachers' positions and may give certificates to those who pass, which certificate may be accepted by school committees instead of holding examinations themselves.

The Senate bill to abolish fines for imperfect weaving was engrossed by the House Monday, after an animated debate, by a large majority.

The Committee on Constitutional Amendments gave a hearing Friday on the petition of the Nationalists clubs and others for the adoption by the State in its legislative practice of the "Swiss referendum" and of the "popular initiative." Now, the referendum is the referring to the people of all legislation, which they may care to vote upon, for popular approval, and no law which the people fail to approve is valid. Upon petition of 30,000 voters the government must submit the law to the people. The idea is to keep near to the people, who are the real source of power, and thus to preserve a genuine Democracy. We have the system in Massachusetts, so far as relates to voting on constitutional amendments, but not for legislative acts. The referendum makes sure that the representatives of the people will not pass any important laws which are against the popular will, as is sometimes done in this country. It is urged that our system of elections does not hold the representatives sufficiently to account and that, in all popular elections, there is a confusion of candidates and measures which does not permit the utterance of the sober, popular judgment upon administrative questions.

By the Swiss practice of popular initative, the people can begin legislation apart from their legislative body. If 50,000 people ask for the submission of a measure to popular vote, it must be submitted and it becomes law if approved, just as a measure originating in the Federal council or in the popular assembly.

A bill has been reported to give the State Board of Agriculture all necessary powers in disposing of the gypsy moth.

Another illustration of the way in which the good country people are used as cat's paws to pull somebody's hot chestnuts out of the fire appeared in the hearing Tuesday for the appointment of a State road commissioner of highways. Abundant argument was presented to show what immense benefit it would be to the farmers to have finely macadamized roads and a strong case was made out. But they were not farmers who were anxious for these improvements. They were bicycle men who didn't like the soft country roads, but want them more like a city pavement. But they didn't say a word about bicycles. There is this to be said for them, however, that if their reasoning and figures are good, it would be of great benefit to the country people to have improved roads. The testimony was positive and uncontradicted as to the miserable condition of our roads compared with roads all over Europe, even in poor districts, to the enormous expense and wear of horses, harnesses and wagons and loss of time due to poor roads, to the great saving of power by good roads and to the rise in value of farm land situated on improved roads. It looks as if something would come from this agitation.

A remarkable bill for taxing church property and that of benevolent, agricultural and other public organizations has been reported unanimously by the Taxation Committee. It provides that when the present land exemption (of national and State property and of the organizations mentioned) equals 5 per cent. of the land value in any city or town all above the 5 per cent. must be taxed the same as other property. Present holdings are not to be affected.

Wednesday afternoon the taxation committee reported a bill to complete the whole plan. It provides that houses of religious worship shall be exempt from taxation to the extent of $50,000 only and that any part of the buildings which are used for other than religious purposes shall be taxed.

The committee to redistrict the State for Congress consists of Senators Bennett of Suffolk, Rep., Breed of Essex, Rep., McDonald of Middlesex, Dem., and McNary of Suffolk, Dem., and Representatives Powers of Hyde Park, Rep., Richardson of Newburyport, Dem., Burke of Boston, Rep., McDonald of Pittsfield, Dem., White of Worcester, Rep., Lowasney of Boston, Dem., Pratt of Lowell, Rep., Rideout of Cambridge, Rep., Finney of Plymouth, Dem., Lord of Athol, Rep., and Child of Swansen, Rep. This makes the committee consist of nine Republicans and six Democrats, the Senate delegation being equally divided and the House members standing seven Republicans to four Democrats.

The House had a long debate Tuesday afternoon on the bill to make more definite the public bar law and finally ordered it to a third reading by 108 to 88 and three pairs But it is not nearly at the end of its passage yet.

Wednesday afternoon, after debate the House admitted the substitute bill of Mr. McDonald of Pittsfield to compel the sale of new railroad stock at public auction. The vote was 101 to 56.

The Labor Committee reported a bill to limit the hours of labor of railroad employes to 10 in 11 consecutive hours, except delays and accidents.

The surprise of Wednesday was Gov. Russell's removal of Commissioner Osborne. The matter went over one week, but it is not to be expected the Council will consent.

Killed by the Cars.

The 7.05 inward train struck and instantly killed a man, under the Beale-street bridge, Wollaston, Tuesday evening.

The man came out of Boston on the 5.10 express train. At Quincy he wanted to get out. The conductor remonstrated but he persisted and got off. Just how he got to Wollaston is not known but was thought to have come by a north bound train.

The man after loitering about the depot for some time asked for a ticket to Cochesett, a flag station near Bridgewater. As he was considerably under the influence of liquor, Station Agent Wilde and Officer Seelye kept watch of his movements.

After asking for his ticket he left the station and it is supposed walked down the concrete walk to the Beale-street bridge and in stepping off the platform probably stumbled and fell across the track. In the meantime Mr. Wilde and Officer Seelye were searching for him. The 7.05 express came along and passed over the body, completely cutting it in halves. The train did not stop as the engineer was not aware of the accident.

Just as the 7.14 inward train was due a man rushed into the depot frantically yelling "there's a man lying across the track." Agent Wilde grabbed his lantern, rushed out of the depot and signalled the rapidly approaching train, but it was too late. The train passed completely over the dismembered body before it could be brought up.

A ghastly sight met the gaze of the train men. One half of the body was on one side of the rail and the other half on the other side, the train having passed over the abdomen.

Undertaker Hall was notified and removed the body to the morgue.

There was nothing about his person to show what his name was or where he lived.

The man was probably about fifty-five years of age, 5 feet, 9 inches in height; he had black hair and slightly gray whiskers. He wore a white flannel undershirt and calico outside shirt, two pair of pantaloons and gray stockings, a black satin vest, black overcoat and soft felt hat. There was a silver watch on his person of the American Watch Co.'s make, number 1,724,342, attached to this was a cheap brass chain and cameo charm. The watch had stopped at 7.09, which was probably the time that the car struck him.

Medical Examiner Tower viewed the body in the absence of Dr. Gilbert.

If you have made up your mind to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to take any other. A Boston lady, whose example is worthy imitation, tells her experience below:

"In one store where I went to buy Hood's Sarsaparilla the clerk tried to induce me buy their own instead of Hood's; he told me their's would last longer; that I might take it on ten days' trial; that if I did not like it I need not pay anything, etc. But he could not prevail on me to change. I told him I had taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, knew what it was, was satisfied with it, and did not want any other. When I began taking Hood's Sarsaparilla I was feeling real miserable with dyspepsia, and so weak that at times I could hardly

SATURDAY, MAR. 21, 1891.

Which Road Would You Take?

If you go back to the forks of the road—
Back the long miles you have carried the load;
Back to the place where you had to decide,
By this or that through your life to abide;
Back of the sorrow and back of the care;
Back to the place where the future was fair—
If you were there now, a decision to make,
Oh, pilgrim of sorrow, which road would you take?

Then, after you'd trodden the other long track,
Suppose that again to the forks you went back,
After you found that its promises fair
Were but a delusion that led to a snare;
That the road you first travelled with sighs and unrest,
Though dreary and rough, was most graciously blest—
With balm for each bruise and a charm for each ache—
Oh, pilgrim of sorrow, which road would you take?

Household Receipts.

FLANNEL CAKES. Two eggs beaten light, one pint of milk, salt to taste, two teaspoonfuls of yeast powder and flour enough for a batter. Serve hot in round cakes with maple syrup.

RICE WAFFLES. Beat three eggs separately; add to the yolks a teacupful of boiled rice, a lump of butter; sift in one and a half pints of flour, add a pint of sweet milk, a little salt, and lastly whites of eggs. Bake in waffle irons.

COFFEE CAKE. Three cupfuls of flour, one-half cup of melted butter, two eggs, one-half cup of sugar, one-half cup of strong liquid coffee, one cup of raisins, one teaspoonful each of cinnamon and allspice, a little clove and nutmeg. Add three-fourths cup of molasses with a scant tablespoonful of soda stirred into it. Bake covered with paper.

TURKEY HASH. Remove the meat from the bones of a turkey, and cut it into neat bits; stir two cups of this into two cups of white sauce; season to taste. Make the stuffing of the turkey into neat cakes, fry them, and arrange them on the dish around the hash.

☞ Dr. Thwing writes, "I thank you for giving your many readers the plea Miss Perry makes for an Annex to Tokyo hospital, in which for the first time the indigent insane of Japan may be treated, but China with no asylum at all, puts in a more piteous plea for immediate help. I tried to reach Quincy ears in person, but so many calls near home led my friends to decline the offer of a lecture at my own expense. We have no paid collectors. The letter of Rev. Mr. Heath was a pleasant surprise for he had no hint from me. I hope many, however will now follow his advice and send a pile of bricks toward the twenty thousand at once needed. It is not a favor to me, but a privilege to each donor to do something to soften asperities awakened in Chinese hearts towards us who have, as a nation, so shamefully abused the people we invited to our shores and by treaty promised to receive with the courtesy which is due to ourselves, as well as to a nation which is the oldest on the globe. 156 St. Marks avenue, Brooklyn."

Springer's Cloak Parlors.

This house is so well known that it is only necessary to say that the assortment of Garments this season is very large and very handsome, and an invitation is cordially extended to ladies to inspect the stock now being opened.

Ladies who desire can have their Cloaks made to order, as the custom department is celebrated for its reliable work and perfectly fitting garments.

Twelve finely furnished connecting Parlors are most attractively arranged with many tempting Garments made for immediate use, and offered at reasonable prices, quality considered. The new location of this firm is most convenient, being in the heart of the shopping district, No. 500 Washington street (corner of Bedford street), Boston, and their building is arranged with every convenience for the transaction of the firm's constantly increasing business, as well as for the comfort of its many patrons.

THE HOUSEKEEPER'S FRIEND. The pioneer friend to the American housewife is "The Household," a monthly publication founded by Geo. E. Crowell in 1868, and printed at Brattleboro, Vt., until last January, when it was moved to Boston, that it might better serve its rapidly increasing list of subscribers.

☞ There are more public holidays in Honolulu than any other city in the world. Among the days observed are Queen Victoria's birthday, coronation day, all the French and Portuguese holidays, the American Thanksgiving day, and the Chinese New Year.

☞ J. S. Richardson of New Orleans, La., has a farm for which he has refused an English syndicate's offer of $22,500,000. It is a cotton plantation, or a series of plantations, consisting of 48,000 acres, to cultivate which 9,000 colored people are employed.

Anecdotes.

Clericus,—"Why don't you lay up your treasures where thieves do not break through nor steal?"

Cynicus,—"If some of the people get there who expect to I'd rather keep mine in my stocking."

Wife,—"Didn't you post that letter I gave you?"

Husband,—"Certainly."

Wife,—"I wish you hadn't. There is something I wish to add to it."

Husband, (producing letter)—"Why didn't you say so before? Here it is."

Johnnie—"What is an egotist, papa?"

Papa—"It is a person, my son, who tells you about himself those things which you want to tell him about yourself."

Aunty—"Do they teach by the object system at your school?"

Little Boy—"Yes'm. They is always objecting to something or other."

Mother,—"Goodness me! Johnny! Why ain't you at school instead of hurrahing around the streets like a wild Indian."

Johnny, (dancing a jig)—"No school today."

Mother,—"No school? Why?"

Johnny,—"Teacher's dead."

One of our exchanges says: "The prospects of a watermelon plantation in this section would be very slim owing to the large colored population." This is a base slander, as the colored people are honest and readily recognize the value of and economy in using Brussels soap.

Annual City Appropriations.

The Committee on Finance, consisting of Roger H. Wilde, George W. Morton, J. Francis Hayward, Lester M. Pratt and Peter T. Fallon, submitted to the Council on Monday evening an order for the annual appropriations for 1891.

The estimated income, according to the Mayor's estimates, will be $157,480, while at the same time the Mayor's budget and that of the School Committee called for a total of $160,480. The question with the Committee on Finance was, How to reduce the appropriations $3000? And this is the way they did it: $50 less for miscellaneous highways; $200 less for sidewalks; $50 less for the law department; $700 less for transportation of school pupils; $1500 less for miscellaneous school expenses, while the item of $2500 for repair of school buildings was lumped with that for repairs of public buildings, and the total reduced $500.

Boston Amusements.

Globe Theatre.

Manager Stetson has made arrangements with Joseph Haworth, the young and popular actor to appear at the Globe Theatre the coming week. The engagement is for one week only and it is said that it will be Mr. Haworth's last appearance in comedy. The plays for the week are "A man of the World" and that taking play "Aunt Jack." Tickets are now on sale at the box office, and at the usual rate. Mr. Haworth has a great many friends, and they will all be on hand to give him a hearty greeting the opening night, Monday, March 23d.

Hollis Street Theatre.

The "Blue Jeans" engagement at the Hollis Street Theatre is drawing to a close, next week being the last. Already crowds have attended the performances and the closing week a crush is expected. Mr. William H. Crane is booked for the following week opening Monday night, March 30th, in "The Senator."

Boston Museum.

Next week is the closing week of that beautiful play "Sunlight and Shadow" which during its brief run at the Museum has met with marked success. The Museum Company has in preparation for Easter week "New Lamps for Old" and "The Open Gate."

Boston Theatre.

It is much to be regretted that today closes the week's engagement of the Primrose & West's Minstrels at the Boston theatre. Excursion parties have been numerous the past week and sale of tickets for the matinee this afternoon and also for the evening is very large. Next week and for one week only Hoyt's satire on superstition "A Brass Monkey" will be presented.

The Teachings of Science.

Among the most marked effects of opium is the production of sleep, of belladonna the production of delirium, of chloroform and ether the production of insensibility, but the two latter articles, when not carried to the extent of causing insensibility, temporarily produce the state called inebriation or drunkenness. The effect of alcohol is similar to these, but more lasting, and when carried to a sufficient extent it likewise produces insensibility. All these narcotics when given in sufficient doses cause death by paralyzing necessary life functions. But these narcotics, even when not carried to the extent of entire insensibility, by their paralyzing effects on the brain and nerves relieve pain when present, opium most of all, and all modify the feelings so as often to produce agreeable sensations and emotions, and all disturb in one way or another the natural operations of the mind.

Another quality all the narcotics possess, but some more than others, and that is, when taken repeatedly they create a desire for the continuance of these repetitions, and tend strongly to the formation of a habit which it is difficult, and in some cases apparently impossible, to resist. It is not possible fully and scientifically to explain the force of the narcotic habits. They are allied to each other, and to a certain extent one may take the place of the other—at least, the formation of one of these habits tends to the production of others. They are much more readily acquired by some than by others. The children of parents who have acquired such habits from an inherited impulse are much more liable to form them; and the use of some of the narcotic articles has a stronger tendency to become tyrannously habitual than that of others.

The opium habit, though readily formed, is, perhaps, more difficult to break than any of the rest, but it will serve, in some respects, to illustrate them all. A dose of opium produces with many persons agreeable sensations, bodily and mental. It quiets restlessness, soothes irritation, and sometimes produces a temporary elevation of thought and a dreamy pleasure. This leads to a desire to again excite such agreeable feelings. But the after effects of the doses are unpleasant. Depression, uneasiness and often pains are felt. These are readily mitigated or removed by repeating the dose, and the agreeable feelings take their place. This state of things naturally leads to repetitions, until the indulgence becomes habitual, and larger and still larger quantities are required to relieve these secondary sufferings and to cause the agreeable sensations. But besides and beyond this, there is a force in narcotic habits not fully understood. Repeated indulgence in any of these articles which make a strong impression on the nervous system, whether that impression at first be disgusting and distressing, as in the case of tobacco, or more immediately agreeable, as in the case of opium and alcoholic drinks, produces a fascination and an enthralment that those alone who feel their force can appreciate. A changed condition is induced with unnatural wants and propensities, which call for and insist upon gratification, however disastrous the results. But whether explained or not, these facts are too familiar to be questioned and too important to be ignored. Alcohol is a powerful narcotic and has all the essential properties of the class; and though so small a quantity of them may be taken or they may be so seldom indulged in that their more disastrous consequences are resisted, yet there is always danger in their indulgence, and injury more or less is produced and in proportion to the extent of their use. Though alcohol has many properties in common with the class to which it belongs, has a similarity of action on the nervous system with the others, yet it has qualities peculiar to itself, and its more particular actions on this system are next to be described.

(To be continued.)

For the Patriot.

New York Fashions.

SPRING MATERIALS.

Light quality wools show the same conspicious features that have been noticable in winter goods. Extremely bold plaids are frequent, while circular or oval spots have grown even larger, nor does the breath of Spring hinder a presentation of fleecy or astrakhan weavings, which appear not only on woolens but on semi-transparent fabrics such as grenadines. Bourette fleckings likewise contribute to a stylish roughness and but that colors are refined and often indistinct, the effect would be too pronounced even for fashionable endurance.

STYLES IN MAKING.

Materials of conspicious pattern of course need combinations of plain fabric and importers bring out the two together, but suitings are tailor made with special attention to fit, and the same can be said of cloths, among which Bedford cords, showing a rep across, are the newest. These and other cloths, or indeed any variety of fine, plain wool are trimmed with passementerie or ribbon enriched by simulated jewels, this last being a special feature of the season. Sheath skirts are still made, but some new designs show small paniers, and others are a little draped or with fullness in front, both of which are the beginnings of greater breadth in outline. Waists are long and especially stylish if made over the R. & G. corset, which will not, like other corsets, stretch and lose its original form. It is extra long-waisted and meets the requirements of both full and slender figures.

MILLINERY.

Capotes are hardly seen in comparison with toques, or turbans, while the supply of hats in fancy shapes is almost limitless. Winter contours are repeated and in consequence a turning up at the back and projection in front is a rule. Flowers nod at back or front, or coming from the back lie in profusion, small ones being preferred in such cases. As to size, indeed there never was such liberty, since from lilacs, lilies of the valley, etc., they increase in all dimensions, until large roses apparently ready to fall in pieces, reach a size of five inches across.

RIBBONS

of steel, silver or gilt, but chiefly the latter, are very fashionable and from "baby ribbon" up to two and one-half inches wide, are placed in upright loops or rosettes. The presence of gilt is, in truth, always welcome; small fruits and berries are made of it and elegant capotes are entirely of gilt in open work. The latter strikes a key note of the time, since fancy weaves in straw are so prevalent as almost to exclude plain varieties, even where sobriety it wished for, since every day hats or bonnets come entirely in fancy weave or with open work brims that finish plain crowns.

LUCY CARTER.

Six million of letters are annually torn and sold as old paper in Washington.

It is estimated officially that the gross expenses of the world's fair will reach $21,500,000.

In 1800 there were not more than 5,000,000 copies of the Bible; now more than that number are issued every year.

It is said that the ashes of Emma Abbott will be placed in the monument over her husband's grave at Gloucester, Mass.

During the 49 years of his life the Prince of Wales has drawn $16,500,000 from the public treasury of Great Britain and his debt, it is said, now amounts to about $8,000,000.

The Massachusetts Bureau of Statistics of Labor is authority for the statement that there are 55 abandoned farms in Plymouth County. Worcester county has 344.

PARISH MEETING.

The adjourned parish meeting of the Universalist church was held in the church parlor, Monday evening, with Joseph G. Brackett as moderater and Charles B. Tilton clerk.

Reports of the treasurer and Parish committee was read and accepted. The treasurer's report was very encouraging and showed the society to be in a better financial condition than for several years. The society has more than held its own during the past year.

The following officers were then elected:

Clerk,—Warren S. Parker.
Treasurer,—Charles B. Tilton.
Collector,—William Parker.
Parish Committee,—C. H. S. Newcomb, John D. Williams, Joseph G. Brackett.
Trustees,—George W. Prescott, William Parker, Warren S. Parker.

The matter of supplying the pulpit for the coming year was left to the parish committee.

Joseph G. Brackett who has been parish treasurer of the society for over thirty years since its organization, declined to serve longer, and a younger man was chosen in his place. He has faithfully filled the office with credit to himself and the parish.

The hand of death had fallen quite heavily on the parish officers the past year, and removed the three trustees and the parish clerk.

SOCIAL HOP.

That old saying "Where there is a will there is a way" was never more aptly illustrated than in the endeavors of the Wollaston Unitarians to have social hops, similar to those of last season. Friday evening the society had a pleasant social time in Perry's hall. Fifty couple danced to the music of Bryant's orchestra. During the intermission the company enjoyed a light spread, consisting of ice cream and cake. The matrons were Mrs. Chandler W. Smith, Mrs. Edmund S. Taylor and Mrs. Charles T. Baker.

The order of dances. March and circle, waltz, quadrille, schottische, lanciers quadrille, waltz, quadrille, polka glide, portland fancy, schottische, quadrille and waltz.

Mrs. Beverly Underwood.

The last of the aged people for which Spear street was a few years ago noted passed away Monday, Mrs. Beverly Underwood. There were Miss Lydia Souther, who lived to be over 100; Mr. and Mrs. Seth Spear, Mr. and Mrs. Abram Prescott, Mr. and Mrs. Norton Q. Pope, Mrs. Lydia Averill and Mr. and Mrs. Underwood.

Many of these lived to be over four score, and several of the couples celebrated their golden weddings. Mrs. Underwood was in her 90th year. She leaves a son and three daughter, one of the latter being for many years a popular teacher in the Coddington school.

Poetry.

"Too Many of We?"

"Mamma, is there too many of we ?"
The little girl asked with a sigh.
"Perhaps you wouldn't be tired, you see,
If a few of your childs could die."

She was only three years old—the one
Who spoke in that strange, sad way,
As she saw her mother's impatient frown
At the children's boisterous play.

There were half-a-dozen who round her stood,
And the mother was sick and poor,
Worn out with the care of the noisy brood,
And the fight with the wolf at the door.

For a smile or a kiss no time, no place;
For the little one, least of all;
And the shadow that darkened the mother's face
O'er the young life seemed to fall.

More thoughtful than any, she felt more care,
And pondered in a childish way
How to lighten the burden she could not share,
Growing heavier day by day.

Only a week, and little Claire
In her tiny white trundle-bed,
Lay with blue eyes closed, and the sunny hair
Cut close to the golden head.

"Don't cry," she said—and the words were low,
Feeling tears that she could not see—
"You won't have to work and be tired so
When there ain't so many of we."

But the dear little daughter, who went away
From the home that for once was stilled,
Showed the mother's heart, from that dreary day,
What a place she had always filled.

Miscellany.

JULIET, THE ORPHAN.

BY AMY RANDOLPH.

"Well, Juliet, what are you calculating to do?" said Mrs. Murdright.

"It's time to make up your mind about something, you know," briskly observed Miss Juniata Jessup.

Juliet May lifted her heavy head, and looked at them with a vague surprise.

"Do ?" she repeated. "What's there to do? I don't know what you all mean."

She was a dark, large-eyed girl with cheeks as pale as a calla-leaf, a Spanish luxuriance of jet-black hair and a slight figure, which seemed to be bound by the weight of her deep mourning. Mrs. Murdright was a tall, masculine woman, with iron-gray hair and a square chin. Miss Jessup wore spectacles and moved around in an active, jerky way, like an extra-large-sized canary bird.

"It's a week tomorrow since your pa was buried," added Mrs. Murdright.

Juliet winced.

"Yes," she said; "I know it. Oh, papa! papa!"

"There, there," said Miss Jessup, as the young orphan hid her face in her hands, "don't give way. It's unchristion, and it's uncomfortable, too!"

"And it's high time," steadily observed Mrs. Murdright, "that you looked matters in the face, Juliet May. You've got your living to earn, and—"

"But I thought I was to live with you," said poor Juliet, who was as ignorant in the ways of the world as a six-month-old infant. You are my mother's sister, Aunt Murdright, and—"

"That is hardly a reason why I should undertake to support every relative I have got in the world," said Mrs. Murdright, sourly. You aren't a child, Juliet. You were eighteen last month, and there's many a girl of your age earns her own living and lays up a handsome sum besides. And it's close on the first of June, and I need every room I have to let to summer boarders."

"And there is no reason," supplemented Miss Juniata, skilfully seizing the opportunity to strike it when Mrs. Murdright paused for lack of breath, "why you should sit with folded hands while your cousin Artemisia works in a skirt-factory, and Louisa Lacy goes out to tailoring."

Juliet sat looking from one to the other, while her heart seemed to stand still within her. At the Grange she had always lived in luxury. She had been the darling and idolized child of a doting father. She had never paused to consider the question of mere money. All good and lovely things seemed to assemble around her by magic. Every one had spoken tenderly to her; and now— and now."

"What am I to do, Aunt Murdright ?" she faltered. "Is all my money spent ?"

"Your money!" hysterically echoed Miss Jessup. "Poor child! You hain't got none. It's all gone in rash speculations and mad inventions."

"Juniata speaks only the truth," said Mrs. Murdright, stiffly, as Juliet's eyes sought hers, as if to ask corroboration of the little old maid's unfeeling words. "You're as good as a beggar, and you must begin to consider in serious earnest what you are to do for your bread. I can't undertake to support you."

Juliet put her little cold hand in a pathetically pleading way on Mrs. Murdright's.

"Aunt," said she, "couldn't I stay here? Couldn't I make myself useful to you ?"

Mrs. Murdright shrugged her shoulders.

"I'm very sorry," said she, "but I don't require any one to play the piano, and sit, around the house in picturesque positions, and be waited on. You haven't been brought up as my girls are, Juliet May!"

Juliet recoiled as if a serpent had stung her; she turned to Miss Jessup.

"Cousin Juniata," she said, "you, too, are my relative. Aid me! Advise me! You have age and experience—I am like a lost child in this great, cruel, grinding world!"

Verily Juliet May was but a novice in all conventional wisdom, or she never would have alluded so unguardly to the age and experience of the sprightly spinster. Miss Jessup bridled.

"I really don't know that I have any thing to say," said she. "As Mrs. Murdright remarks, people must expect to work in this world!"

But Miss Jessup studiously banished from her recollection the fact that, when she had first set up dressmaking for herself, Squire May had generously lent her money for her lease, furniture, stock and fixtures. He had never claimed a cent of interest; he had never so much as hinted at the repayment of his loan, and she had been equally silent. And it is to be presumed that she had quite forgotten the whole circumstance, when she added, with some little vindictiveness.

"And, to my mind, it would have been a deal wiser if your papa had looked a little more closely to your money instead of lending it to ne'er-do-wells like Chauncey Graham to squander!"

"Cousin Chauncey was always good and kind!" cried Juliet, coloring up. "He would have paid papa, if he could! And it is mean and dishonorable of you to say such things as these, Juniata Jessup!"

"Hoity-toity!" cried Miss Jessup. "Mean! Dishonorable! Well, if he ain't both, let him put in an appearance and say what he has done with that money!

As Mr. Graham was at that moment supposed to be in Australia, engaged in the management of a mammoth sheep farm, this was perhaps a rather unreasonable demand. But, to Miss Jessup's infinite amazement, and, perhaps, to her discomfiture as well, the front door was pushed open at that juncture, and a bronzed, bearded apparition, in a suit of some foreign style and cut, stalked in.

"Is this Mrs. Moses Murdright's house ?" said he. "Can any one tell me if Miss Juliet May is here?"

Mrs. Murdright stared, Miss Jessup seemed equally amazed; but, with a cry, Juliet May sprang to her feet.

"Chauncey!" she cried, "it is my cousin Chauncey!"

"I am Chauncey Graham," said the young man. "I only arrived in the port of New York last evening. It all seems so strange to me to hear that my cousin, Squire May, is dead—that Juliet is without a home!"

He stood in surprise, scarcely able to recognize in this tall Andalusian-faced girl, the chubby-cheeked little play-fellow of former years. But when she flung herself so confidingly into his arms, he held her with a tender and chivalric embrace.

"Oh, Chauncey, I am so glad that you have come," she sobbed. "Oh, I was so lonely and forsaken! No one has seemed to care for me, since papa died no one offered me a home!"

"I will," said Chauncey, quietly. "There, there, little one, don't fret. It is all smooth sailing now. The money which your father lent me has borne fruit, seventy time seven, and it is yours now!"

Mrs. Murdright here recovered herself so far as to extend a fish-like hand to Mr. Graham; Miss Jessup pressed eagerly forward.

"My dear Juliet," she said, with a little acidity, "you are such a mere baby! Don't you see that your cousin isn't at all the proper person to take charge of you?"

"Why not?" said Chauncey Graham. "It seems to me that I am the very one. And my mother is in New York waiting to extend a mother's tender care to Juliet."

"At all events, my dear," said Miss Jessup, "don't cling to your cousin as if he were a floating spar and you a drowning mariner! Do sit down! Dear Cousin Chauncey," with a smile which displayed every one of her false teeth to the very best advantage, "this is such an agreeable surprise. We have thought and talked of you so much!"

While Mrs. Murdright hastened to prepare what she called "a little refreshment" for this relative who seemed so much nearer and dearer since he had come back home with plenty of money.

"I wish, now," she muttered, "that we hadn't been quite so sharp with Juliet. She was a silly child, no doubt, but if she is going to be rich again—Eh? What?" to her niece who now presented herself with a crape-veiled hat and ink-black draperies folded across her slender shoulders. "You're not going away so soon, Juliet, my darling ?"

"Chauncey says that his mother expects us by the next train," said Juliet, upon whose pale cheek a new color had kindled. "And we have no time to lose!"

"And," simpered Miss Jessup, who was hurriedly donning an extremely youthful Gainsborough hat with rosebuds and daises wreathed around its brim, "I have volunteered to accompany dear Juliet. Really, I have grown too fond of her to allow her to slip away from me like this!"

Mrs. Murdright made a grimace.

"The scheming old cat," she thought. "She actually thinks she is going to lure Chauncey Graham into marriage. Well, I never did see such idiotic folly!"

But she said nothing of this as she kissed Juliet good-bye with an effusiveness which surprised the young girl.

"Farewell, my darling," she said, almost tragically. "And remember that if ever you need a home, my heart and hearth are equally open to you."

"Why didn't she say so before ?" Juliet asked herself, vaguely amazed at what seemed to her such a surprising inconsistency. "Why did she talk so disgracefully about my being a burden, and earning my own living? And why is Juniata Jessup coming back with us without ever being invited ?"

Poor little Juliet! She had yet much to learn of the ins and outs of this world!

Miss Jessup's stay in New York, however, was not prolonged. She came back the next day, very ill satisfied with her journey.

"Things are quite changed since I was a girl," said she. "There's Juliet engaged to Chauncey Graham already—or as good as engaged—a mere chit like that, with no knowledge nor experience of society! And Mrs. Graham taking on airs like the queen, and telling me, up and down, that she didn't care for my company! Me! Her own cousin twice removed! And Juliet parting from me like a clam, never even kissing me nor telling me she hoped to see me again!"

"Humph!" said Mrs. Murdright. "That's generally the way rich people behave. But I almost wish, Juniata, we hadn't been quite so short with the child!"

"Yes," said Miss Juniata; "but who was to suppose that she was to be an heiress, after all ?"

Letter from New York.

NEW YORK, March 25, 1891.

[From our occasional correspondent.]

DEAR PATRIOT: While I was out the other day for a quiet little stray on the west side of Broadway, as the west side is the best and most fashionable, for if we are out of fashion we might as well, perhaps a little better, be out of the world, you know. There is a West Broadway, but of that I will only stop to say the "tony" folks don't go that way, except they go astray. As I was going to say, I was trying with all my might and main, in spite of the rain, to pick out a sequestered lane on the sidewalk, where I might for a short season be seemingly sequestered from the maddening crowd.

My dreamy eyes were drooping delightfully, or were, as Shakespeare might have remarked if he had met me in a fine frenzy, rolling. I only found the paving stones quiet, the passers and repassers were surpassingly noisy, like a house afire, if my gentle readers will excuse this warm figure of speech. Now as I was reflecting upon a reflection in a rising inflection that was reflected from my shining orb of reflection, (if you will pardon this bit of self-conceit I have inadvertently indulged in against my will), I happened to hear a dudish fellow say to his companion, loud enough to be heard all over the city, that the Yankees were discovered at Yankton Agency, away out West, and were not half as cute as they fancied themselves to be, nor good for guessing either. My face, nearly as fair as a calla lily, became instantly as red as the planet Mars. My raging wrath knew no bounds for the rich blood of old New England is coursing through the lanes of my own veins, yet with my amazing self-restraint I stitched a strong binding all around the four selvage edges of the aforesaid wrath in less than no time, as it were.

I looked as mild as a setting hen, and no fowl play is intended by the remark. Then I gave this youthful stranger of the genus dude such a withering gaze that he will never forget to his dying day, though he should live to be older than Mister Methuselab, Let me observe here in parenthesis that I think when a man lasts as long as this gentleman of the olden time he ought to be Mistered. We should never miss the prefix Mister when we allude to this venerable ancester of ours. Then I backed up my penetrating, piercing look by this sharp little speech, giving my mouth the wryest wring it ever got before in the long course of my born days: "I deny the allegation and denounce the alligator." Then I subsided into a substantial, satisfied specimen of silence and the nice, noisy young man, who had spoken in a dastardly and disparaging style of my dear fellow-countrymen in the East, and his partner passed on, musing meekly, I trust over their justly rebuked mendacity.

There is one thing about me that I like best of all of the large number of fine qualities I might mention if I did not possess the grace of humility, which keeps forever out of sight the shadow even of boasting, and that is my charity; for all in which I am as much like Mr. Lincoln as the four seeds of a cucumber. But after all I take pardonable pride in having a soft side for the genuine Yankees of New England, who are sources of comfort and joy to all the world and New York too, as I am one of the modest comforters myself.

The most popular play seen in this city for fifty years is "The Old Homestead" with its bright pictures of life in New England. It is still drawing large houses, as it has been for years. The live Yankee forever.

Whale Bone.

MILTON, March 17th, 1891.

To the Editors of the Quincy Patriot:

Your remarks on whale bone in the last PATRIOT reminded me of the whale which came ashore on the President's Beach in Quincy, Sept. 6th, 1822.*

He was as near as I can remember, about 20 feet long. At the time I cut from his mouth a piece of whale bone; it was about 2½ inches wide at the base and run up tapering to a point, about 13 inches in length which I have always preserved as a great curiosity.

Now if a whale 20 feet long has a whale bone only 2½ by 13 inches how much larger must one be who has a bone from 10 to 12 inches broad and from 12 to 15 feet in length. Such a monster can hardly be conceived of by any one who has not seen it. What must the body be, when the open mouth would remind one of a pair of old fashioned barn doors.

Prejudice Against Will-Making.

One of the most unreasonable superstitions is that possessed by many people that deters them from making their wills, trusting to good luck to have time when the candle of life is flickering out. A lady of unusual culture and strength of character, a leader in a wide social circle and active in movements for the advancement of her sex, died not long since of a third stroke of paralysis. She had a good deal of property and many articles of rare value that she desired to leave to a cherished young lady companion; but even after the second stroke, and she knew that a third would be fatal, she could not bear to think of making her will. She dropped off suddenly, and her friend is without anything, while remote relations get all. The instance is familiar to many in this city, but it is not singular.—St. Paul Globe.

Last of Lincoln's Hearse Horses.

A local celebrity recently died after a kind, useful life of thirty-eight years. His name was Jesse, and the one act which entitled him to mention was participation in the funeral cortege of Lincoln. He was the last of the six white horses which drew the hearse containing the honored body along the streets of Indianapolis. His mate in the proud but sorrowful lead of the team died eight years ago.—Indianapolis (Ind.) Journal.

☞ Buffalo Bill's cattle ranch in Nebraska embraces 3,000 acres lying within three miles of the town of North Platte. On one of the larger buildings are painted in big white letters the words, "Scouts' Rest Ranch." Altogether there are said to be 15,000 cattle on the grounds.

Miss Carter, of Wilmington, Mass., has given that town $10,000, the income of which is to be used in painting houses that may need it from year to year, "provided the applicant does not own a dog and is a member of some temperance organization."

"Odd Tom."

Old Tom Weit had a habit of doing queer and unexpected things, and thus came to be known throughout the region in which he lived as "Odd Tom." Sometimes his oddity appeared in some peculiarity of dress as when he wore his coat wrong side out, because, as he said, he had "got tired of the looks of the right side." One day Tom went to his next neighbor, Zebah Green, to hire his horse for the day.

"What d'ye want 'im for? was Zebah's inquiry.

"Oh, jest to go down to the village to do some marketin'," was the answer. "P'raps I might go on afterward as fur as Job Stone's, 'n' look at his oxen."

"Wal, I don't want ye to have 'im," replied Zebah, referring to the horse, "but ye may, jest ter 'commodate ye, if ye won't go on fu'ther'n jest to the village—ye know that's 'most ten mile."

"Why, of course not," said Tom, "not onless you're willin'."

"Wal, then, take 'im, but don't ye drive him no fu'ther'n the village, or I'll never let ye have him agin'."

So Tom harnessed the old horse and started for market. As he passed Zebah's house on the way he heard, faintly wafted from his neighbor, who stood in the barn door, "Be sure ye don't go on fu'ther'n jest to the village!"

Toward night Tom was seen, laden with bundles, coming slowly up the road from the village—on foot. Out rushed Zebah, open mouthed.

"What ye done with old Bill ?" he cried.

"Wal," answered Tom with the utmost coolness, "ye seemed so all-fired scairt for fear I'd drive him further'n jest to the village, that I didn't dare drive him home again, 'n' so I left him there, under the store shed."—Youth's Companion.

Face Perception.

By some singular instinct a man who was born blind can tell when he is opposite an object, and can tell whether it is tall or short, slender or bulky. He can also determine whether it be a solitary object or a continuous fence; whether a close fence or an open one, and sometimes whether a wooden fence, a stone wall or a hedge. None of the five senses has anything to do with this perceptive power; says a contemporary, but the impressions are made on the skin of the face, and by it transmitted to the brain. He therefore names this unrecognized sense "facial perception." The presence of fog interferes with facial perception, and makes the impressions faint and untrustworthy, but darkness is no impediment. A noise which distracts the attention interferes with the impressions. In passing along the street he can distinguish shops from private houses, doors and windows, and whether the windows consist of a number of panes or a single sheet of glass.

Told by Your Teeth.

Projecting teeth show rapacity.

Rather long teeth, if evenly set in the head, denote long life.

Short, small teeth are said to denote weakness and short life.

The lower teeth projecting and closing over the upper range are indicative of a harsh nature.

When the upper gum shows above the teeth directly the lips are opened, it is a sign of a cold and phlegmatic nature.

Small, retreating teeth, which are rarely seen unless in laughter, show weakness and want of physical and moral courage.

The more human teeth in shape and position approach to those of the graminivorous animals the more placid is the character.

The more the teeth, in point of size, shape and arrangement, approach to those carnivorous animals the more violent are the animal instincts in the person.

White, medium sized and evenly set teeth, which are seen as soon as the mouth is open, but which are entirely exposed—that is, which do not at any time show the gums—are a sign of good and honest natures.

A Cheap Way to Warm Cold Feet.

More than twenty-five years ago, while I was in the Thirty-fifth Massachusetts regiment, strutting around in Virginia, I was sometimes troubled with cold feet. At one time while I was stamping upon the ground in the effort to warm my extremities a comrade in the same regiment said to me, "If your feet are cold try this." He raised his foot from the ground and struck some light blows with his hand on the upper part of his leg, just above his knee. I did the same with both legs, and instantaneously felt a flow of warm blood coursing downward, and the feet became comfortably warm. The experiment was repeated with good effect in the comparatively warm climate of Virginia, and also with equally good results in the more rugged atmosphere of New England.—Boston Journal.

The preliminary catalogue of Phillips Academy, Andover, recently published, shows an enrollment of 353 students, 221 in the classical, and 132 in the scientific department. The representation by states is as follows: Massachusetts 97, New York 47, Pennsylvania 31, Connecticut 20, Maine 18, Illinois 15, New Jersey 15, Ohio 14, Vermont 13, New Hampshire 10, and thirty other states having from one to five each.

Last fall 105 men went from this school to the various colleges and scientific schools, a number which indicates the amount of work the school is doing.

Are You Sure You Do?

Do you know a good thing when you see it or hear about it ? If you do you are wise beyond the average of your generation. Some, you know, plod along in the olden ruts of work and worry, keeping house on the old fashioned plan—that employing much bone, sinew and muscle—but others there are who have modern ways. For instance, they use Brussels soap and save much labor. It's economical.

For the Patriot.

Twixt Ebb and Flood.

BY MISS WOLLASTON.

On a strip of beach—nay, of white glistening sand, that the eye follows in graceful curvature for miles, heightened by a lovely moore in September, two stood; their outline was clearly cut upon the summer sea. At their feet the music of the waves disturbing the pebbles and rhythmical to the ebb and flow of the tide. Back, peers the village of Hampton, N. H., still old and lazy in its traditional customs and habits, with nothing to boast of but its quietness. To the southward marked but strongly in the coast is Boar's Head, and to the northward the fair headland of Rye.

The scene at this moment is peculiarly hushed, save by the sound of the surf and anon by the lazy flap, flap of the sea-gull as its inquisitiveness brings it close to the shore, and then these words came sweetly, and floated upon the hushed air:

"Jack ! You are not going to leave the old home, are you ?"

The speaker was on the verge of womanhood, with a face wondrously fair, framed in hair like a web of gold, and as she spoke she bowed her head and tears sparkled in her eyes, and he, Jack, in the vigor of his young manhood—a fine specimen of his kind, the hardy fisherman conquering his emotions and looking seaward, stammered a reply:

"Yes, Barbara, I must !" And then folding her in his strong arms and looking down into her tear-stained face, and with a voice choked with emotion further said:

"I feel as if I ought to be a man, and to be one I must seek the world. What can I do in this place so small that my ambition is smothered ? Besides, I must make a home, a home worthy of you; will you wait ? and then"—

Yes, Barbara, I will return to claim you as my wife ! Will you wait ?"

Her one word softly spoken "wait," sealed and locked the secrets of their young hearts.

Then the wind gathered up what the sea had heard—

Twixt ebb and flood my heart is thine,
Twixt ebb and flood thy heart is mine—
To eternity.

He went on his way far into strange lands; work, work was his for the little Barbara he left behind. Upon her name, built he his hopes, and none so pure as this sesame to his happiness and his all. Still he struggled manfully on to reach the goal of his life.

"A home for her"—then flashes this intelligence. "A wreck on the coast of Madagascar of the ship Southern Queen, and all drowned save one, Jack Harding.

On that bleak coast, in the darkest of nights, he saw always before him Barbara, for her he would live, and then came the mastery for a life and he the conqueror.

To England then went he; from there to New York city and reported to the ship's owners, bearing the ship's papers. She carried a heavy insurance, and to have him back from the dead, was to their advantage.

Would they reward him? Yes, and handsomely; 500 pounds and a master's berth. With what joy did he receive this glad news, now to his Barbara with bright hopes and all joy he journeyed.

"At last. Barbara," he said, "we will have our little home." And then he thought,—How will she look—has three years changed her—perhaps her looks, but never her heart.

Quickly sped the train bearing his buoyant spirit to the haven of his joys—alas, not to be.

On a bright afternoon in September, just three years to a day he left the peaceful village, now he was back, and his first inquiries was of her, his Barbara.

They ominously shook their heads and pointed to the grave-yard there. Yes, a simple white head stone marked "Barbara" there it was, all that he had known so dear.

They told him how gentle and meek she was in her sickness to the end, and at intervals how she murmured: "Jack and our home." She waited, and there was prepared for her a home beyond.

"God," he cried in anguish, "to spare me and take her, my life is gone." Then went he to the beach where they had plighted troths years ago, fell he upon the sand and unbuckled his grief. The wind gathered up what the sea had heard:

"Twixt ebb and flood my heart is thine,
Twixt ebb and flood thy heart is mine—
To eternity."

Nature's True Tonic.

One of the advantages of light gymnastics, says the Ladies' Home Journal, is that the sick and convalescent can make what appear to be trifling efforts, and by them, in time, be restored to active health. If too feeble to be practically able to make but little exertion, try what are known as deep-breathing movements. Lie flat upon the back, take as long and as deep breaths as possible, and while the mouth is closed, slowly throw the arms up in front and then at the sides. Rest for ten minutes. Try again the same inhalation and exhalation of air, the latter being pure and fresh. After awhile, attempt the same, sitting up. These exercises can safely be taken by the sick one every day, several times, and the whole muscular system will be improved, just as if some revivifying tonic had been given, a far better one than any charged with alcohol or some like stimulant.

Why it is Called "North" River.

I overheard Chauncey M. Depew, at the Fifth avenue hotel the other evening, explaining to some friends from the country the difference between the North and the East river. "Probably not one New Yorker in a thousand can account for the fact that we have an East and North river instead of an East and a West river. The explanation is found in the fact that the Hudson was originally called the North river to distinguish it from the Delaware, which was familiarly known as the "South river" among the early colonists. While the latter has become obsolete as a designation, the former is still in current use, although there is no use for it. It is just as easy to say 'Hudson' as 'North,' and it is certainly more charming to both eye and ear."—New York Star.

Parish Meeting.

Quite a lively meeting was held in the chapel of the Unitarian church on Monday evening. Two hours or more was spent in discussing the subject whether the society would remove the stone posts and chains which have enclosed the grounds for some fifty years or more, and build a sidewalk and set edgestones fifteen feet outside the present posts, to the edge of the lot claimed by the society. The edgestones on Washington street to be in a straight line westerly from the chapel to Hancock street, enclosing the little grass plot, near the fountain, which would also close the street between it and the church.

Fortunately the society had some good and wise men, who cautioned them not to do anything of the kind. They could not legally close the street if they wished, and the city certainly would not permit it to be closed. If the society attempt it, it would get into hot water which would greatly injure its present good standing.

It was decided also not to move the posts and chains and set edgestones fifteen feet outside, as there were some who wished to go to church who lived at a great distance from the old stone church, and were obliged to ride or stay at home. The other churches in the centre had sheds to hitch their horses in, while this society had only the posts; and if they were removed they would be obliged to go to the livery and have their horses put up, or stay at home.

It was voted to grant permission to the Village Improvement society to locate their fountain upon the plat at the junction of Hancock and Washington streets, as desired by the Improvement Society.

It was voted to appropriate $5,142 for expenses during the current year.

It was voted to appropriate $175 for repairs on organ.

At a late hour the meeting adjourned to Monday evening next.

Spring.

It is rushing right along, and soon it will be hot weather. The bluebird, the blackbird, the robin and others have already arrived, and the morning songs of the robins are pleasant and sweet. The boys have got out their marbles and hoops and are having a grand time, while the girls are jumping rope. The buds on the trees are starting and the elms have quite a foliage. Tomorrow is Easter, although earlier in the season than usual. The snow and mud are gone and many of the streets are dry, and some are beginning to be quite dusty. Soon we shall be praying for the watering cart. Such is life.

Mrs. W. W. Thomas, on Granite street, has a great many very handsome crocuses in blossom, and she had some snowdrops two weeks ago. Mr. Jacob Flint's yard has also many pretty crocuses. Who says Old Winter is still in Miss Spring's lap? He better get up and move on.

1832—1891.

Of late years, the annual meetings of the Congregational church have been most delightful occasions. Many circumstances contributed to make the gathering of Thursday evening a marked success.

While willing hands were completing the arrangements for the social feast in the chapel, a large company was gathering in audience room where social greetings were exchanged among those who now reside in Quincy and numerous stray-a-ways who came back once more to join in christian fellowship at the Church Home. Perhaps the cordial chatting was stimulated by the choice organ selections of Mr. Gilbert; at any rate, all went cheerily 'till the company were invited to gather at the tables which were laden with the most relishing of edibles.

About two hundred plates were spread, and it was a happy sight when Pastor Norton arose and, asked all to join in singing "Praise God from whom all blessings flow." It was soon proven that "two things can be done at once,"—for talk and food were seldom if ever so thoroughly mixed.

After the repast was finished, there followed prayer by the pastor, fine singing by a quartette (Miss Isaac, Miss Gray, Mr. Pollard and Mr. Griffith.)

Officers were then chosen:

Clerk and Treasurer,—Jas. S. Baxter.
Deaconesses,—Mrs. E. Clapp, Mrs. C. H. Hardwick and Amelia L. Bumpus.

SUNDAY SCHOOL OFFICERS.

Superintendent,—C. W. Carter.
Assistant Supt.—Alfred C. Sampson.
Secretary,—Wm. P. Bailey.
Treasurer,—Jas. S. Baxter.

PRIMARY DEPARTMENT.

Superintendent,—Miss Elizabeth F. Merrill.
Assistant Supt.,—Mrs. Taber.
Secretary and Treasurer,—Mrs. J. F. Merrill.
Librarian of Sabbath school,—Miss Jilson.
Assistant Librarian,—Mr. Paterson.

For lack of time, the church roll-call was omitted, but a list was read of those, who from points near and far, had sent letters of regret for inability to join in the meeting. A bouquet on the desk was a token of rememberance for Miss L. Annie Bumpus lately deceased.

The pastor, in his brief address, bound himself to the text "Let thy words be few," but nevertheless gave happy expressions to the fraternal feelings of all present as he directed thought backward and forward.

Surely the last half century has witnessed much prosperity in this church, where the gifts for benevolent objects for the past year have been about one thousand dollars, and whose influence and position in our community have steadily increased from year to year. May its seen and unseen power grow with the city.

Miss Pfaffman favored with a solo. All joined in the hymn "Blest be the tie;" the pastor pronounced the benediction, and the 58th annual meeting was ended.

Hospital Aid Meeting.

The Hospital Aid Association met in its new quarters, the Probate Court rooms, for the first time on Thursday afternoon. Thirty or more were present and they were delighted with the change. As they said, the quarters were built for them, nice large room, well lighted, finished in light wood, and everything clean and tidy. The association now has room for the large chest of drawers, presented some months ago, in which sewing will be kept.

Three new members were voted in; Mrs. A. D. Albee, Mrs. L. W. Nash and Mrs. Lucy Lyons.

The fete to be held at Merry Mount Park the Seventeenth of June, was the engrossing subject. There were some changes in the committees, owing to resignations. The Wollaston representatives are now: Mrs. W. G. Corthell on the fancy table, Miss Merrill on the refreshment table, and Mrs. H. T. Whitman on ice cream. Mrs. Henry McGrath takes the place of Miss McDonnell on the South Quincy ice cream table, and Mrs. C. H. Bearce fills the vacancy caused by the resignation of Mrs. Badger.

The hours of the fete will be from noon until twilight. Deputy Manager Langley will be asked to send a police detail. The Committee is in hopes to secure the City Band. The Seventeenth of June comes on a Wednesday this year.

The inception of the lodge it will be remembered was phenominal, starting in with over 100 members, of whom 22 were charter members. WOLLASTON.

The dastardly mean trick of last Sunday night in daubing the fine large notice board of Messrs. Wood & Harmon deserves more than a passing censure. There are a few small boys, and some two or three pretty large boys, that deserve to be dealt with to the extent of the law. It is about time the citizens of Wollaston called a halt. Petty acts of damage to property have been repeatedly made during the past year by boys belonging to respectable families. The names of these boys are kept on file, and should such acts not cease they may be called up.

Old Folks Concert.

"Should auld acquaintance be forgot?" No! not if the Methodists of Wollaston can help it. Old style songs, old fashioned clothing and old time melody was the "entertainment" at the sociable given by the ladies of the M. E. society on Wednesday evening.

Dr. A. J. Colgan was the leader of the "musick," Mrs. Pierce, pianist; Miss Burkman, organist; Mr. Sprague, cornetist. "Mr. Israel Emerson" and "Miss Martha Waterhouse" were received with marked attention. "Martha," "Lucy Ann," "Jemima," "Minnie Ann" and "Aurelia," rendered choice selections. The two Mabels sung a "flower song" and then disposed of their baskets of flowers at good prices.

The refreshments consisted of a large pail of doughnuts and several "pignuts."

The costumes were of the "antiquest" kind. Ola Whittier, Mabel Pierce and Mabel Nicholson did charmingly. Mr. Sprague received a well merited encore for his playing, and Mr. "Israel Emerson" several for his acting.

A Parsonage

A large audience was present, and thoroughly enjoyed the occasion. The ladies deserve much credit for the success of the entertainment.

At the adjourned parish meeting of the Wollaston Congregational society held on Wednesday evening, it was voted to purchase the lot of land situated at the corner of Marion street and Winthrop avenue, now owned by Mr. E. B. Pratt of Quincy, and build a parsonage thereon. Mr. A. A. Lincoln and Mrs. F. J. Perry were appointed as a committee to solicit subscriptions for the land, which will cost in the vicinity of $1,100.

Edward Hewitson, H. T. Whitman and W. S. Sayward were appointed as a committee to bring in plans and specifications of the proposed parsonage at the next adjourned meeting, which will be held on Wednesday evening, April 22.

Bowditch Benefit.

Seldom have the people who attended the testimonial to Mr. Galen Vinton Bowditch Wednesday evening enjoyed themselves more heartily than they did on this occasion. Early in the evening there was a reception in Robertson House parlors to the "most popular man," and the LEDGER man doubts if a president or king ever felt as supremely happy as did Mr. Bowditch.

Monk's music and "the committee" greeted him as he entered, with "Hail to the Chief." He was "got up regardless" in full dress, silk hat, light overcoat and cane. For an hour he smiled benignly on the hosts who called to pay homage and offer congratulations. And these included the Mayor, Councilmen and other city officers, ex-officials, professional men, not excepting Henry H. Faxon, Esq., who brought his opera glasses.

The entertainment was given in Robertson hall, which was crowded. The curtain was "rung up" at 8 sharp, the scene being the interior of the "Ink Club Room." The members had gathered to receive the "distinguished visitor," who arrived after a song by Miss Kate Garrity. There was a great demonstration when Mr. Bowditch came upon the stage, which did not subside for several minutes. His speech was frequently interrupted by applause.

After the public entertainment, Mr. Bowditch entertained "the committee" at supper, when he also rendered choice operatic selections.

The artist and committee were then photographed.

For the Patriot.

A Simple Contrivance.

As many owners of dogs either through fear of losing them or from other causes keep them chained, they would no doubt be glad to adopt a more humane method.

Take a stout wire upon which place a sliding ring. Run the wire taut from one tree or post to another and attach the chain to the ring, this allows the dog to roam the length of the wire.

Another advantage, the wire can be transferred from one part of the premises to another, giving the dog change and enabling him to get the green grass upon which their good health so much depends.

This is a simple contrivance and equally secure as the bad and cruel method of a short chain which makes it impossible for him to exercise, and being an active animal, he must suffer when so confined, which is wholly unnecessary.

I offer this, feeling that your readers will gladly avail themselves of so simple a plan to make their pets more comfortable.

SCROFULA

Is that impurity of the blood which produces unsightly lumps or swellings in the neck; which causes running sores on the arms, legs, or feet; which develops ulcers in the eyes, ears, or nose, often causing blindness or deafness; which is the origin of pimples, cancerous growths, or "humors;" which, fastening upon the lungs, causes consumption and death. It is the most ancient of all diseases, and very few persons are entirely free from it.

How Can It Be CURED

By taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, which, by the remarkable cures it has accomplished, has proven itself to be a potent and peculiar medicine for this disease. If you suffer from scrofula, try Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"Every spring my wife and children have been troubled with scrofula, my little boy, three years old, being a terrible sufferer. Last spring he was one mass of sores from head to feet. We all took Hood's Sarsaparilla, and all have been cured of the scrofula. My little boy is entirely free from sores, and all four of my children look bright and healthy."

WINDOW SHADES

At best are not particularly ornamental, but rather a disfigurement to the well-furnished room. It has long been a study to remedy this and bring out a shade that would contribute to the room's furnishing, and still not be a conspicuous detail of the completed whole. We have this week opened three cases of

Damask Hollands,

One of the first shipments to this country of a new article, and a novelty in this line. The effect is similar to the self-colored wall hangings now so popular, a delicately outlined figure appearing on a ground of same color. A beautiful cream tint and a deeper buff are the only colors they are made in at present. We feel confident these goods will meet with popular favor, and invite house furnishers to an inspection.

We have some novelties in

CITY COUNCIL.

The City Council meeting Monday reminded one of the old town meetings. True the debate was limited to the people's representatives but most of these took part and kept the ball a rolling for over three hours. And it did not gather any moss for the School Committee either, every attempt to increase their items proving ineffectual.

Councilman Duffield was the only absentee.

Grand Juror.

Upon notice and motion, Mitchell Goodhue was drawn as a grand juror.

State Aid.

The reports of the Committee on State Aid recommending $4 per month for Mary E. Louney, and leave to withdraw to Bridget Donnelly, were accepted.

Claim Unjust.

The Committee on Claims reported leave to withdraw on the petition of John A. Duggan for alleged damage to his building on Hancock street in Ward Six. Accepted.

A Reporter Recovers.

The Committee on Claims recommended the payment of $100 to J. F. Costello on petition, for injuries sustained by being thrown from sleigh. Accepted.

Claim Dismissed.

The Committee on Claims reported on the petition of Thomas Divine for damages, that hearings had been arranged but the gentleman had not put in an appearance, and recommended leave to withdraw. Accepted.

Unpaid Claims.

The Committee on Finance reported an order appropriating $10,000 to meet unpaid bills of 1890.

Councilman Jones, while he believed in paying all just claims against the city, thought it should be impressed upon the heads of departments to keep within appropriations.

Councilman Bryant did not understand how the amount could be so large, and hoped that the bills be printed.

Ordered to second reading.

A motion to have the bills printed was defeated, by vote of 9 to 11.

The Appropriation Bill.

The order making the annual appropriations was read twice and the question came upon engrossment.

Councilman Powers moved to substitute $2,000 in place of $1300 for transportation of school children. He believed the School Committee capable of judging of school wants, and that the chairman had at the previous meeting giving good reasons for the increase. The majority of the School Committee had long been in service. Who was to say whether it was better for the children's health to walk or ride, the parents, the Council, or doctors. Two eminent physicians were on the school board which had decided transportation expedient.

Chairman Claflin of the School Committee coincided. The main point he argued was that it was a bit of justice to the outskirts. All obstacles to obtaining an education should be removed. The argument that residents in the outskirts save on valuation he considered a weak one; their taxes were less, but they were denied many privileges. It was unjust to single them out for a special tax for transportation. It was also faulty to reason that all should be carried if any, for it was a necessity not a luxury. He here read from the DAILY LEDGER the report of the committee on transportation.

Councilman Bryant called for ruling, if an amendment was in order, as the full amount which could be raised was incorporated in order.

President Thompson ruled amendments in order.

Councilman Jones reiterated that it was no hardship for Ward Four pupils to walk to the John Hancock building, particularly as it was only grammar school children who had to do this. The exercise would be beneficial. There was more danger of getting cold by riding, then it might be unhealthy to huddle children into a wagon because some might be uncleanly. The item of $1300 would be $450 larger than last year, and he queried how it would be expended.

Councilman Sherman inquired how it would do to transport the uncleanly ones.

Councilman Fallon, a member of the Finance Committee, had not attended its meeting, and did not endorse the change. He characterized Councilman Jones as a kicker, and resented his attack on unclean children. To him Johnnie, Charlie and Georgie were about the same. Believed it unjust to dictate to School Committee.

Councilman Little thought $2000 right and just. Councilman Jones was solicitious about the health of the children, what did he think about their attending school in an attic. Milton furnished transportation to High school, and Quincy should.

Councilman Jones was pleased to be called a kicker, and was sorry he could not return the compliment to Councilman Fallon.

Councilman Moxon said he came from the "famous Atlantic," which would naturally favor the transportation of its children, but believed the people there would rather have their sidewalks repaired of the two. He believed the School Committee ought to co-operate with other departments and try to reduce expenses. Favored $1300.

Councilman Sherman said the argument of his predecessor was threadbare and worn out. We could not have this or that because other things were necessary and the amount of it was we got nothing. He was proud of the School Board and the Council ought to stand up and support it.

Councilman Warner favored $2000, as it might save the erection of additional high schools. He cited Weymouth, Abington, Easton, Framingham and Newton as places which furnished transportation.

Chairman Claflin hardly thought the School Committee inferior to sidewalks.

Councilman Wilde said it was the purpose to use the School Committee fairly. The wants of each city department were considered separately and reduction made were possible, as it was necessary to reduce the grand total $3000. The committee did not see why it was necessary for the school department to start new schemes when other departments were making retrenchments. The $450 over last year would allow the School Committee to pay bills which it had hastily contracted this year without further embarrassment. If Council should favor the amendment some other item must be reduced.

Councilman Pope was surprised that any Ward Six Councilman should oppose free transportation, which other cities were adopting. He favored the amendment.

Councilman Pratt thought some members lost sight of the principal question—how to pay. He opposed the amendment on this ground.

Councilman Powers believed city could find a way to raise the amount. The School Committee might save $200 by giving up office in Durgin and Merrill block, and taking rooms in City Hall.

Amendment lost by 8 to 13 as follows:

YEAS—Drake, Fallon, Hammond, Little, Pope, Powers, Sherman and Warner—8.

NAYS—Bass, Bryant, Hayward, Gray, Holden, Jones, Morton, Moxon, Newcomb, Pratt, Rinn, Roberts and Wilde—13.

Liquor Laws.

Councilman Little moved that the item of $500 for enforcement of liquor laws be transferred to appropriation for Police Department.

Councilman Jones opposed any transfer.

Councilman Wilde said the amount was $500 less than last year, and should not be further reduced. The voters had spoken emphatically against license.

The amendment was lost, only one voice being heard in its favor.

School Repairs.

Chairman Claflin then spoke of the proposed transfer of $2500 for repairs of school buildings to the amount for public buildings. He termed it an unjustice and rank absurdity. Quincy now outranks any other city in point of common school education. The success was due to the fact that Col. Parker was unrestricted in his wants, and there was no division of authority. He thought a School Committee of nine full large, but he was sure 32 was. If these interferences continued, he said, Quincy schools will deteriorate to the level of other cities. Most of the items for repairs were for less than $50. He argued that opinions on who should have charge of repairs were at variance, and he thought it should be a question of expediency. Under the changes who should say what were necessary repairs.

The Council had nothing to say on this point and Mr. Claflin proceeded to the Items for Incidentals.

He argued that $3500 was much too small, as $1500 was needed for rent. It would be the rankest folly. He would not pretend to answer newspaper criticism, but claimed the quotation of Brockton expenditure was wrongly quoted. If the voters don't wish the present school committee they should proceed to discharge them as speedily as possible.

Councilman Wilde again denied the charge that it was the purpose to "interfere" with the School Committee. In reply to Councilman Sherman he said the changes were not made until after a three hours' conference with School Committee.

Councilman Powers believed repairs should remain under care of School Committee.

Chairman Claflin desired the opinion of City Solicitor Hayes read, and while the the Messenger went for it he proceeded to read that of Solicitor Pattee, rendered in 1890.

Councilman Bryant raised the point of order that the Council should be governed by the opinon of the present Solicitor.

President Thompson ruled that that of ex-Solicitor Pattee might be read.

Councilman Bryant appealed from the ruling of the chair.

A discussion followed in which Councilmen Jones, Powers, Moxon, Warner and Bryant participated, and it was voted to sustain the chair.

Both opinions were then read.

Councilman Sherman's motion to replace $2,500 under direction of the School Committee was after further discussion lost by vote of 7 to 14 as follows:

YEAS—Drake, Fallon, Hammond, Pope, Powers, Sherman and Warner—7.

NAYS—Bass, Bryant, Gray, Hayward, Holden, Jones, Little, Morton, Moxon, Newcomb, Pratt, Rinn, Roberts and Wilde—14.

Contingent Fund.

Councilman Warner inquired about the item for a contingent fund.

Councilman Wilde explained that it might be used for conveyance when the Council was in session until after the last cars. Such a night as this for instance.

The Appropriation Bill

Was then passed to be engrossed and under a suspension of rules to be ordained with but one dissenting vote as follows:

YEAS—Bass, Bryant, Drake, Fallon, Gray, Hammond, Hayward, Holden, Jones, Morton, Moxon, Pope, Pratt, Rinn, Roberts, Sherman, Warner and Wilde—18.

NAYS—Powers—1.

$141,563 by Taxation.

Councilman Wilde offered an order that $141,563 and $2 on each poll be raised this year by taxation. Under suspension of rule order passed to be ordained.

In Anticipation.

Councilman Wilde offered order to borrow $140,000 in anticipation of taxes. Rule suspended and order ordained by unanimous vote.

The Mayor forwarded a communication of the Chief Engineer for right to erect poles on Liberty and other streets for fire alarm. Referred to Committee on Fire Department.

Pearl Street Nuisance.

The Mayor forwarded a communication of the Board of Health recommending an appropriation to abate a nuisance in Pearl street. Referred to Committee on Health.

A motion to adjourn for one week was defeated, and at 10.30 the Council adjourned until the next regular meeting, April 6.

PASTOR INSTALLED.

Rev. Edward A. Robinson Regularly Installed over a Wollaston Church.

The installation services began at 7 o'clock. The pulpit was tastefully decorated with potted plants and ferns. The services were opened by an organ prelude by Miss Minnie P. Prescott, followed by the reading of the minutes of the council by the scribe, Rev. William H. G. Temple. The divine blessing was then asked by Rev. J. Henry Yeoman, followed by reading from the fourth chapter of St. Paul's epistle to the Ephesians and also part of the tenth chapter from St. John, after which the congregation joined in singing hymn 709, "How Firm a Foundation." The sermon was preceded by the prayer of installation by Rev. N. G. Clark, D.D. Dr. Alexander McKenzie delivered an impressive and powerful sermon, taking for his text the fourteenth, fifteenth and sixteenth verses from the third chapter of St. Paul's epistle to the Ephesians.

When the sermon was concluded the audience rose and sang that grand hymn, "Father of Mercies Bow thine Ear." The charge to the pastor was then delivered by Rev. William H. G. Temple, and the right hand of fellowship was extended by Rev. Ellis Mendell of the Boylston Congregational church, Jamaica Plain. The hymn, "Blest be the Tie that Binds," was then sung by the congregation. The Rev. M. M. Cutter of Boston, Rev. Mr. Robinson's predecessor, made the concluding prayer.

After the great audience had sang the Doxology, Rev. Edward A. Robinson, the pastor, pronounced the benediction.

For the Patriot.

From the State House.

BOSTON, March 25, 1891.

The city of Quincy has been successful in its effort to get from the Committee on Cities a bill to compel the School Committee to give estimates of money needed, and a bill was reported unanimously which adds to section 32 of the Quincy charter the following words:

> On or before the twentieth day of February in each year the School Committee shall furnish to the City Council an itemized and detailed estimate of the moneys required for the school department during the ensuing financial year.

This afternoon a bill was reported which grants the petition of the city of Quincy in respect to sewerage.

The Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported a resolve that the popular vote upon the adoption of the constitutional amendment as a prerequisite for voting shall be taken at the regular State election, Nov. 3 next. The friends of the amendment are very anxious that the vote shall come on that day, for they fear that the vote would be very small on any other day. The committee reported reference to the next Legislature on the Nationlists' ideas regarding the Swiss referendum and the popular initiative. This will not be objectionable to the petitioners and they will load up with statistics and arguments for next year.

In the House on Thursday an attempt was made to admit a bill to permit one liquor license for every 500 people of the State. Debate raged along the old familiar lines, but the movement was not strong. It had only 52 votes to 129 against it. Only two Republicans voted for the bill, but nineteen of the leading Democrats of the House voted against it, including Messrs. Quincy, Howe of Cambridge, Hemenway, Handley, Stearns, Warren, Leslie and Worcester.

Last of its matters Thursday afternoon the House took up the bill for taxing benevolent, charitable, religious and scientific property in land, hitherto exempt, over 5 per cent. of the valuation. The committee was unanimous, but confessed that no statistics whatever had been submitted to show how the bill would bear on the cities and towns. It was riddled by criticism and defeated by 40 to 65.

The Committee on Woman Suffrage reported a bill in the Senate Friday afternoon conferring municipal suffrage upon women. This is the usual course. It has become a custom to make up this committee in favor of the change. So the reporting of the bill is no sign that it stands any more favorable chance than last year. None of the committee dissented formally from the report, but several said to the chairman that they reserved the right to vote against the bill.

With only two dissenters the Committee on Constitutional Amendments has reported in favor of the amendment to require a majority of each branch of the Legislature for a quorum.

Inexpedient has been reported on giving school committees the authority to introduce manual training into the public schools.

Events have occurred rapidly this week. Wednesday was the last day on which committees could report under the rule fixing a limit of time and strenuous efforts have been made to comply with the rule. On Tuesday the largest number of committee meetings was held in the history of the Legislature, probably. Every committee room was full and besides this committees were in session in the insurance office in the Commonwealth building, in the president's room, in the speaker's room, in the pardon room of the council, in the men's gallery of the House, in the women's gallery and in the corner of the Senate at the reporters' tables. When the extension is finished the Legislature will not be so cramped.

Many important matters have been pushed in during these days, but, for all that all of the leading committees will have to take two or three weeks more in which to finish their business. Gov. Russell sent to the House on Monday a message reviewing the unfortunate condition of discipline at the State prison and recommending a reform in the management by which subordinate officials should in turn be held responsible to their superiors—the keepers to the warden, the warden to the prison commissioners, the commissioners to the Governor and the Governor to the people. Thus, he thought, discipline could be enforced. He also recommended the abolition of the office of prison superintendent. It is to be said of that office that it was established in 1887 by a bill which was never debated, but was rushed through when the Legislature was in such haste to go home that it was grossly negligent. Gov. Ames would not sign the bill unless its taking effect was postponed to November, so the next Legislature might amend it. But the amendment was never made.

Testimony by the State Commissioner of Foreign Mortgage Corporations regarding Western mortgages is of great interest to the investors in that sort of property. About a dozen of the Western farm mortgage companies which have been doing business in Massachusetts have already gone to the wall and their records are not hopeful for that sort of business. Some have guaranteed the interest and now the holders of the mortgages find abandoned farms on their hands, out of which they can save anything, if they can. A word to the wise is sufficient.

A bill for registering all who practice medicine has been reported. It shuts no one off from practice, but requires full record of personal history and education, so far as bears upon the point of competency. Public records are to be kept and heavy penalties are imposed for perjury in making the required statements.

The Committee on Public Service has reported unanimously a bill to make the salary of the members of the Legislature for the regular annual session $1000.

On Tuesday the Senate had a long fight on the bill to repeal the present prohibition of public bars and voted in its favor by 23 to 14. The House has gone on record by a close vote against the bill, but it is not safe to predict yet the utter defeat of the liquor element.

For once the country towns have carried their point. The House has agreed to a bill to permit appeals to local boards of health from orders of the inspectors of schoolhouses, which boards, after public hearing, may alter, annul or affirm the decree.

It helps to show how the number of insane people is increasing in the state to note that there was reported to the Senate Wednesday a bill for building a new asylum at Medfield for the accommodation of 1000 patients, to cost not over $500,000.

At the council meeting Wednesday afternoon a strict party vote was taken on the removal of Police Commissioner Osborne by Gov. Russell. It was just as every one expected, but the Council improved the occasion to reply to the governor's message to them. They express their high appreciation of Col. Stone, who was nominated to Osborne's place, and hope they may have a chance to show the governor that they have no hostility to him, but, they say, it would not do to remove a man who has not been found in fault for the sake of getting in, even a man who might be better.

In the House Wednesday the attempt of previous years to make state election day a legal holiday was renewed by Mr. Quincy of Quincy who proposed a bill as a substitute for an adverse committee report. The debate and the vote was pretty nearly on party lines and by 74 to 105 the House refused to let in the bill.

The committee on agriculture has reported a resolve appropriating $2000 to be used in gathering information about the abandoned farms of the State and in disseminating that information where it may do some good to the farms. They also reported a bill to relieve farmers from punishment for selling milk with less than thirteen per cent. solids, if it is natural milk. RULE.

Granite Fountain Benefit.

The house of Mrs. Theophilus King on Adams street, was thrown open to the public Tuesday afternoon for an entertainment for the benefit of the public granite fountain fund. This fine work is nearing completion in the yards of McKenzie & Paterson, who have the contract for $5,888 of which sum $700 remains to be collected.

Mr. King's drawing room was converted into a beautiful interior. A mantel with a row of hyacinths, tall glasses with masses of Catherine Mermot roses and large pots of Spirea made the interior look like summer.

Miss M. E. Hardwick, of Quincy, read a paper of absorbing interest on Alaska which she has recently visited. Following this, there was a musicale consisting of selections by the accomplished violinist, Miss Fannie P. Hoyt of Boston, with Miss Fannie C. Berry accompanist. William Hoelscher and George E. Benney on zithers and vocal music by Miss Grace Isaac.

Mrs. Theophilus King threw her house open again Wednesday afternoon for the benefit of the public fountain fund. The decorations on the interior were the same as Tuesday. The entertainment consisted of musical selections with reading by Mrs. Claire H. Gurney, and club swinging by Mr. John McGovern. There was also a social tea and dance for the children.

Japanese Wedding.

The Universalist ladies gave one of their enjoyable suppers Wednesday evening, which was followed by "The Japanese Wedding" as an entertainment. The characters, which were taken mostly by young ladies of Braintree, who did exceedingly well, were as follows:

The bride—Miss Essie Sturgis.
The groom—Miss Bessie Tirrell.
Bride's father—Miss Wealthy Sweeney.
Groom's father—Miss Lilla Anderson.
Bride's mother—Miss Estella Pierce.
Groom's mother—Miss Nellie Monk.
Go Between—Miss May F. Simmons.
Six Bridesmaids—Miss Sadie Revere, Miss Alice Mullen, Miss Grace Moreland, Miss Allie Cain, Miss Edith Cain and Miss Susie Glover.

Mrs. Stone, the accompanist, is an accomplished musician, who did finely on this occasion. She is a neice of Mr. R. G. Elliott of this city.

The platform had been furnished a la Japanese, and the introductory remarks by Miss Helen W. Arnold enlightened the audience on the strange ceremony, in a nation whose graceful customs have attracted the admiration of the most civilized nations. It was a representation of a marriage in high life. There was no spoken vows, and no priest or official, simply a social and civil contract. The "Go-between" a trusty friend of the lover plays a prominent part.

It would be difficult to give concisely a description of the ceremony, but it was finely exemplified by the young ladies.

An instrumental duett on piano and violin by Master Willie and John Cuff closed the entertainment.

The Quincy Patriot.

SATURDAY, MAR. 28, 1891.

If I Were You.

If I were you, I often say
To those who seem to need advice,
I'd always look before I leaped;
I'd always think it over twice.
And then I'd heave a troubled sigh—
For, after all, I'm only I.

I'd ne'er discuss, if I were you,
The failings of my fellow-men
I'd think of all their virtues first,
And scan my own shortcomings then.
But though all this is good and true,
I am but I; I am not you.

If I were you and half so vain,
Amidst my folly I would pause
To see how dull and light a fool
I was myself. I don't because—
(And here I heave a pitying sigh)
I am not you; I'm only I.

If I were you, no selfish care
Should chase my cheery smile away;
I'd scatter round me love and hope;
I'd do a kindness every day.
But here again I find it true
That I am I, and you are you.

I would not be so very quick
To take offense, if I were you;
I would respect myself, at least.
Whatever others say or do.
Alas! can no one tell me why
I am not you, instead of I?

In short, if I were only you
And could forget that I was I;
I think that little cherub wings
Would sprout upon me, by and by.

—St. Nicholas.

Household Receipts.

BREAKFAST CAKE. Into one pint of flour mix two teaspoonfuls of cream tartar. In one cup of milk dissolve one teaspoonful of soda. Beat two eggs with two tablespoonfuls butter and three of sugar. Add the milk, and then stir in the flour. Beat well, and bake in a quick oven.

EGG TOAST. Beat two eggs very light; add to them one pint of milk. Slice baker's bread or nice light home-made bread, and dip the pieces into the milk and egg, letting them lie long enough to be thoroughly moistened and yet not fall to pieces. Fry a delicate brown in hot, fresh suet. Serve with sugar.

PRUNE JELLY. Soak a pound of prunes in a quart of water three hours. Drain them and strain the water in which you soaked them. Put it on the range with a pound of sugar and let it boil half an hour. Remove the stones from the prunes and put them into the boiling syrup and boil it up again. Soak half a box of gelatine in a little cold water, and stir it into the boiling prunes. Pour them into a mould wet with cold water and set them in a cold place to harden. Serve with sugar and cream.

STEAMED FOWL. If you wish to roast an old hen, dress and stuff it; put a thin cloth in the bottom of the steamer and set it over a kettle of boiling water: put the fowl in and steam three-fourths of an hour, then put it in the oven and bake as you would a young fowl.

QUEEN'S PUDDING. One pint of bread crumbs, one quart of milk, four eggs (yolks) two tablespoonfuls of sugar, grated rind of one lemon. Bake about one hour, then spread the top with current jelly. Beat the whites of four eggs to a stiff froth; add one cup of sugar dissolved in the juice of a lemon. Spread over the pudding and brown.

TWICE ELECTED. Ex-Commissioner Prichard was elected superintendent of streets for the second year by the Board of Road Commissioners of Medford. The board was abolished at the annual town meeting and the Selectmen unanimously elected him superintendent of streets. It is not very often a man gets elected to the same office twice in one year. We learn that letters, from some prominent men in Quincy, were received by the Board recommending Mr. Prichard very highly for the position, for which he feels under obligations.

☞ Easter falls this year on March 29, an unusually early date. The earliest date on which Easter can fall is on March 22, and this only in case the moon is full on March 21, when this date happens to fall on Saturday. This combination of circumstances is extremely rare; it occurred in 1093, 1761 and 1817, and will happen again in 1990, 2076 and 2144, while during the three following centuries it is not once "on the books" at this early date. On the other hand Easter never falls later than April 25; this was the case in 1666, 1734 and 1886, and will only happen once in the next century—namely, in 1943.

☞ There is to be a new long distance telephone line for Burlington, Vt., to Boston, by way of Springfield. In the sweet by and by, long distance telephones will be within the reach of all.

☞ One hundred thousand dollars will hardly cover the loss sustained at Saratoga by Spencer Trask, a wealthy New York banker, by the burning of his elegant summer residence, which was totally destroyed. A portion of the furniture statuary and paintings were saved.

Anecdotes.

"I don't want any castor-oil," said a sick liitle Boston boy, petulantly."

"Why, Horace," expostulated his mother "don't you know that castor oil is made from beans?"

And the little boy, whose faith in his mother was perfect, took the dose and feebly asked for more.

"Are these mackerel quite fresh?" asked a lady of a ragged but pompous old colored fish pedler who came to her door.

"Oh, yes, lady, puffeckly so, puffeckly so!" was the reply.

"Jess nostilize them, and see."

"Nostrilize them? What do you mean by that?"

"Why, lady," said the pedler, with a look indicative of pity for her ignorance, "smell 'em! smell 'em!"

He,—"I don't think the world is exactly fair to men."

She,—"Why not?"

He,—"Well, the man who has a head, for instance, gets ahead, while the man who hasn't one doesn't."

Jack—"I had a proposal last night from Ethel."

Harry—"This isn't leap year, man."

Jack—"I know it, She proposed that I shouldn't call on her any more."

Watts—"Now, if I understand correctly, the first principles of socialism is to divide with your brother man."

Potts—"Then you don't understand it correctly. The first principle of socialism is to make your brother divide with you."

Mark Twain says: "Since using Brussels soap I can see the point of my own jokes.'

Society for Ethical Culture.

The anniversary services of the Boston Society for Ethical Culture, will be held at Ashmont hall, Dorchester, on April 5 at 3 P. M. Speakers, Rev. William G. Babcock and Mrs. Clara M. Bisbee.

A Sunday Kindergarten will be established at 2 o'clock, and ethical classes for character talks, the study of the bibles, nature, art, hygiene and citizenship.

The members being profoundly impressed with the need of a purer morality, have united for the purpose of ethical culture. The society is a continuation in principle of the free society of Dorchester as founded by Mrs. Bisbee, July 3, 1881, with a view to greater freedom and usefulness. The address at 3 o'clock will bear directly on human conduct, followed by conversation on the topic.

For the Patriot.

A Good Woman Gone.

After a long and useful life Mrs. Louisa Underwood has gone home. A good neighbor, a true friend, a thoroughly Christian woman, she has ended her life work and is at rest. She will be sadly missed, for of her it can be truthfully said "none knew her but to love her." To many a sorrowing heart she has carried comfort, to many a sick bed, patient care and at all times and everywhere she was a helpful blessed influence in this world of ours. It was with her always the bright side uppermost. Always cheery, ever patient and at all times hopeful and content. Of her it can indeed be said, "She lived to a good old age. Good indeed for she lived consistently and to her children she has left the priceless legacy of the example of a noble life. They can well rise up and call her blessed' but many a weary day must pass before they can accept contentedly their loss Time, however, will finally help them to wait patiently for the meeting 'on the other shore,' for although we say, 'she is gone,' we know she is still among us in the memories of friendly deeds, of loving words of counsel and of active usefulness.

Happiness of Owning a House.

It is interesting to see the great improvement that during the last few lustrums has taken place all over the country in domestic architecture. How much a matter of course it has become for every family who, by earning and saving, can amass a sufficient sum to have a house of their own, paying thereafter no more rent, and enjoying the liberty of living where they can do just as they please without reference to a landlord! The blessings that seem to be heaped upon a family who have a house of their own are found to be almost unnumerable. There are no monthly or quarterly payments to be dreaded and met, and followed by consciousness of the inevitable necessity of the next one. There is no landlord, either miserly, or merely desirous of receiving some reasonable return on his investment, to be solicited in relation to repairs. If one thinks an alteration is improving or conductive to greater comfort, and can afford it, one can have it made at once without asking or haggling with any owner, or waiting his pleasure, or going without it; and where one never had the heart or generosity, or felt able to be at the expense for another's benefit, one can plant vines and fruit trees and flowers about the house, sure of being the only one to enjoy them, every year a shrub, a seed, a root, till by-and-by the place is embowered with beauty, as it never would be if a landlord who feared for his paint and his clapboards and his pocket had first to be consulted.

False Teeth Lengthen Life.

Very few people realize how much the dentist has done for mankind. To mention one thing only, the perfection to which the manufacture of false teeth has been carried has practically abolished old age—that is, old in the sense that I used to know it. You see none of the helpless, mumbling old men and women that you formerly did. This is not because the people do not attain the age their parents and grandparents reached, but because the dentist has prevented some of the most unpleasant consequences of advanced years. Men of 70 no longer either look or feel old, because they are not deprived of nourishing food at the time when they need it most. Estimates have been made showing that the average length of life has been increased from four to six years by the use of false teeth.—St. Louis Dispatch.

WOMAN. A lengthy and interesting article from the pen of our townsman, Edward S. Huntington, Esq., will be found in the New Nation of March 14th. He closes his article with the following terse paragraphs:

"The voice of nationalism has sounded no false note in the advocacy of full rights to women. The foundation principle of nationalism is human brotherhood. If the brotherhood of man does not include the sisterhood of woman, the phrase is a meaningless generality. Equal rights for man, leaving the rights of women unequal, as at present, is no proper watchword for a party organized for social justice."

"Woman, by lending her aid to the holy cause of industrial equality for all the toiling producers of the wealth of the world, will redeem her own salvation from the cruel bond of sex slavery."

—The Revue Industrielle gives a process for preserving sheet-iron smoke-pipes and chimneys from rust, which may be found useful. According to this, nothing is necessary but to paint the pipe thoroughly, either with coal or wood-tar, then fill it with shavings and set them on fire. The heat roasts the tar, and, at the same time, opens the pores of the iron, which appear to become filled with carbon, and to be thus preserved from rusting for an indefinite period. A smoke flue is mentioned which was thus treated twenty-six years ago and is still in good condition.

Anti-trust laws have been passed by several states, and others are considering the matter with a view to enacting similar laws. Wisconsin has a bill before its legislature covering this point, which makes the forming of trusts or other combination, etc., to restrict trade or competition an illegal act, and provides a heavy penalty for a violation of the law. But somehow or other such laws do not prevent trusts being formed, as there is always a loophole of escape, and this the combinations find out sooner or later, and in one way or another evade the law.

☞ The New York Tribune tells of a fastidious lady who drove to her butcher's and told that individual that whenever he or his assistant spoke to her through the telephone they must wash their hands and put on a coat. "It is highly indelicate," she said, "for you to speak to a lady with unclean hands and in your shirt sleeves, and unless you cease doing so I shall have to trade with the other butcher person."

Apple blossoms in all their natural beauty and fragrance were seen in a drawing room the other day. They were cuttings from a New Jersey orchard, and three weeks before had been bare whips upon a tree. They had been put in water and set in a window in the sun. Cherry blooms can be brought out in the same way, and the lilac is very susceptible to this treatment, a little lime being put in the water in their case.

☞ The richest Rothschild is said to be worth $70,000,000. The richest man in England is worth $50,000,000. John D. Rockefeller could lose as much as Rothschild is worth and still be worth a fabulous fortune, more than the richest man in England, and John D. Rockefeller is but one of many in America.

The Teachings of Science.

In the last PATRIOT some of the effects of the narcotics as a class on the nervous system were pointed out and their liability to produce narcotic habits were dwelt upon. Nothing relating to our existence is more interesting in science, or more important to our wellbeing than the formation of habits. Men are sometimes said to consist of bundles of habits, and certainly our habits largely determine our characters, our usefulness and our happiness. They not only make us what we are, but what we shall be. Habit is defined as a quality given to our organism by use.

The primary law of habit is that all vital actions tend to repeat themselves, or to become easier of performance and more likely to be performed the more they are repeated. Every act, physical or mental, performed or suffered, leaves an impression upon the organ performing it, rendering the organ more able and more inclined to perform it again. There are exceptions to this broad statement, but it is strictly true in reference to the formation of habits. As we have seen, many strong impressions upon the nervous system create an intense desire for their repetition, and acts in general tend to the habitual. Addison, the essayist, long since said, "Do that which is best, and habit will render it most agreeable," and when we do that which is worst habit renders it, if not most agreeable at least more easy and more likely to be continued.

The habitual acts of young people establish in them dispositions and characteristics which are seldom materially changed, and almost never completely eradicated; and the qualities thus acquired become so fixed and constitutional as to be transmitted from generation to generation. It is by this law of transmission that the sins or evil qualities of the fathers are visited upon the children, and by the same law blessings come to thousands who on the part of their ancesters and themselves keep the commandments—obey the physical and moral laws.

A wicked disposition, acquired by wicked habits, desires wickedness; and a narcotized brain desires narcotism, and is followed in after generations by brains more inclined to acquire the narcotic state. These facts of habit and their hereditary transmission are so important as to justify their repeated statement in a series of articles intended to convey scientific truths which have a bearing upon the deepest interests of all for whom they are designed.

But what are the effects, immediate and remote, which alcohol, in the different degrees and modes of its use, has upon the brain and nervous system, and through these organs upon character and destiny? In answering this question it will be well to consider, first, the more immediate effect of a single or a few doses, and then the effects of its continued use in different quantities. It should be borne in mind that we are not discussing the strictly medicinal effects of alcoholics in special diseases or in the shock of accidents. These are questions which belong to the medicinal profession, and respecting which those without the profession are not supposed to have definite opinions, at any rate not more than they should have about arsenic, strychnine or other powerful medicinal agents. We are considering the essential action of alcoholic drinks on the system, without reference to their modifying influence upon diseases; though the opinions entertained respecting their essential, or what is called their physiological action should largely govern their omission or use in diseases.

The first impression alcohol makes upon the brain, after being taken into the stomach, is that conveyed from the later organ by nervous sympathy, or by that peculiar relation between different parts of the body established by the everywhere prevailing nerves, by means of which an impression upon one part produces an impression of some kind on other parts. The sympathy between the stomach and the brain is very intimate, as is well known generally, and is especially understood by those who are dyspeptic. This first impression of alcohol upon the brain by sympathy with the stomach is very speedily produced and is comparatively short; or if continued longer, it is observed by the stronger and more enduring effect produced by its being absorbed and carried by the blood to this organ. This first sympathetic impression, when only a fairly moderate amount of alcohol is taken, is to a certain extent and in a certain way often exhilarating. In depressed conditions it often arouses the system and it relieves fainting almost as speedily as dashing water upon the face; indeed it acts upon a similar principle, though rather more permantly. It is this sympathetic, transient, apparently exhilarating effect that gives the idea, which is so common, that alcohol is a stimulant, though it is not so in its direct effect by its presence in an organ, as was shown in the experiments upon the heart, an account of which was given in a former chapter.

The Western farm mortgage that has lured millions of dollars of Eastern capital to its loss has changed its base. It has proven generally a delusion and a snare, but transferred to lands needing artificial irrigation, there are those who believe it will be all right. Yet unless farming is generally more profitable than it has lately proven, it is hard to see where profit can come to private companies going to all the inevitable expenses of irrigation for producing agricultural products in competition with localities where nature furnishes all the water needed. The loud demand from the arid regions for irrigation at the expense of the general Government tells the story. No such demand would be made if the expense of irrigation would afford a profit to private capital.
